We move so many pianos we could give lessons.

In fact we do. The professionals from Despatch Moving and Storage that pad, pack, load, drive, and unload your possessions have received hours and hours of training long before we let them touch any of your belongings, let alone your Baby.

Despatch began moving people in 1910. Even then they realized the key to successful moves wasn't just strong backs and powerful trucks. It was heart. Caring about the people they were moving and the things that made their house a home were more important.

Today, the thank you letters we receive from our clients are music to our ears. Many of the words used strike a familiar chord — careful, friendly, understanding, professional, courteous, and efficient. We're not surprised. Moving pianos is not our only forte. Our staff knows how to baby your antiques, collectibles, fine art, furniture, as well as your floors and walls. In short, if you're planning a move call us — but only if you want to be babied in grand style.

The End of Dogs

Is There No Place For Dogs in the Hamptons in the 21st Century?

By Dan Rattiner

For as long as I can remember, dogs have been part of our lives here on the East End. Some people liked them and some people didn't. But, like kids and mothers-in-law, they were part of the landscape.

It was not so long ago that the town of East Hampton was all upset because Basil didn't come home. Basil was a dachshund that belonged to a realtor living on Woods Lane who, every day, made the rounds of the stores downtown. One morning he failed to show up and everybody just thought he took the day off. But the next day when he didn't show, alarms went off. The police were called, a townwide search ensued, and it even made the local newspaper. But eventually he turned up. Somebody had thought he was a stray and had taken him home. All was well.

Then there was the sheepdog in Southampton who, every morning for ten years, showed up at the post office to follow the mailman on his rounds downtown. When he died, the town mourned. Eulogies were written to the memory of this wonderful dog.

Dogs are our animal companions. They are loyal, loving and fun to be around. They do not fit neatly into any slot in the animal kingdom. They are neither prey nor predator. They are not wild. Yet they are not human either. Or not quite human. I fear that, as things are going, their niche here on the East End, and in much of the rest of America, is slowly being closed.

I recall when I first came to adulthood here in the town of East Hampton and rented my first home, I got a dog. I'd had him just a week his name. It was such a ridiculous name. Scampy. Scampy. Pretty soon everybody on Newtown Lane was looking for Scampy. He finally turned up inside the supermarket, now Waldbums, just a doorway away from where I had first lost track of him.

A man in a white apron came out of the market to tell me so. He was not angry. "Scampy is running around in there having the time of his life," he said.

We went in and got him.

For whatever it's worth, today, that story would never even happen. You can't be on Newtown Lane with a dog running free. You can't take a dog in where there is food. You can't do this and you can't do that. I submit we are the poorer for it.

I am not sure the reason for this shift regarding dogs has resulted because there are more people per square mile out here now or even because there are more dogs per square mile out here.

I think there has been a fundamental shift in the way we view a whole lot of things about life. And one of them is dogs.

For one thing, there is now the insurance problem. When I was a little boy, I went on a sled down a steep hill where everybody else was sleigh riding and somebody's German shepherd appeared out of nowhere and began or two when this happened: I was on Newtown Lane in East Hampton with him when I turned around and he was gone. He did not immediately return. And I was frantic. Where did he go? I ran up and down the street calling his name, which was Scampy, the name that the dog pound I had gotten him at told me was Martha Stewart did not race a 600-pound, carved out pumpkin across Canada's Lake Pesaquid last weekend, but not for lack of trying. Ms. Stewart was invited to participate in the seventh annual Pumpkin Regatta in Windsor, Nova Scotia, but because of her criminal record she needed a special visa, which she feared she would not be granted. Canadian officials intervened on Martha's behalf, but it was all for nothing, since Stewart was unable to attend the race due to inclement weather.

The Canadian film Kardia will be this year's recipient of the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation prize at the 13th Annual Hamptons International Film Festival. The film, written and directed by Su Rynard and starring Mimi Kuzyk, tells the story of Hope, a woman who discovers that the experimental heart operation she received as a child has mysteriously linked her life with another. The Sloan award is given to films that explore science and technology themes in fresh, innovative ways and depict scientists and engineers in a realistic and compelling fashion.

Main Street in Sag Harbor will turn into a block party at 5:30 Saturday evening (not Friday as earlier scheduled), to celebrate the reinstallation of the art deco Sag Harbor Cinema sign. The party marks the end of an eighteen-month crusade led by Brenda Siemer to save the sign. ## End (continued from page 17)

following me down, barking as he went. He caught up with me at one point and he bit me on the arm, breaking the skin. As a result of this, I had to go to the doctor and get a tetanus shot, and my mother called the owner of the dog to tell her she should not have been allowing her dog out where kids are sleigh riding if she knew the dog was a biter.

Today, we file a lawsuit. Money changes hands. And that is that. Except we go to great lengths now to PREVENT anybody from filing a lawsuit. And one of those areas is with dogs. Dogs need to be leashed. Or muzzled. Or kept at home.

We even protect the dogs from lawsuits. Or from personal injury, which is another thing that is a big deal today. For many years, you'd see Bonackers driving around in pickup trucks with black labs running around happily in the bed. Either black labs or golden retrievers. You had a choice. But then it was thought by somebody at town hall that a dog could break an ankle running around back there while the truck was moving or worse, going around a turn, the dog could actually get thrown out and run over. Boy, now THERE was a lawsuit.

Dogs had been in the backs of pickup trucks for fifty years without one single case of a dog being thrown out and run over, but the town passed a law saying that dogs in the back of a pickup truck had to be "loosely" restrained, with a leash attached to the truck that was a sort of bungee. He'd fall out, the leash would spring him back in or something.

I saw a few of these arrangements after that.

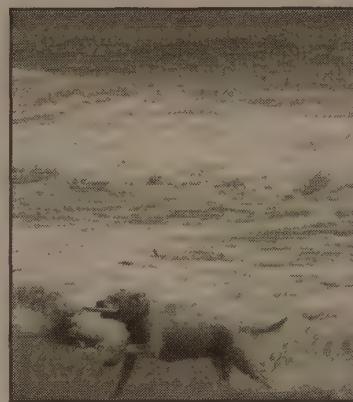

They looked completely ridiculous. This led to a dramatic reduction in the number of dogs in the back of pickup trucks.

Dogs used to travel everywhere in the cargo holds of airplanes. It was no big deal. I took Scampy to the Canary Islands, to Guatemala, to France, to Spain, to New Orleans, to Mexico and to Maui in a box in the cargo section of airplanes. He was fine.

But then, somebody, somewhere, had a dog die in the cargo hold of an airplane. And now you have to sign a waiver releasing the airline from liability and so forth and so on — and there is a feeling that it simply is not safe in the cargo holds of these better airplanes that we have now, as it was in the second rate airplanes that we used to use. And so few people ship their dogs anymore.

Dogs, somewhere along the line, have come to be considered by many people as a health hazard. I don't know. There is evidence that children that grow up with dogs have more immune antibodies in their systems than children who grow up without dogs. They've traced it to dog saliva. Dogs licking you makes you healthier. But who would believe it?

There are people who even SLEEP under dogs. There was a well known rock group years ago called Three Dog Night, so named because in the Outback of Australia the aborigines call

"night" by different names. One word translates as a "One dog night," another word translates as a "two dog night" and still another word translates as a "three dog night." The colder the night, the more dogs.

Dogs sound the alarm when intruders come by. They sniff out people in the mountains who have lost their way. Some have even been known to run back into a burning building and drag out an unconscious child.

I am certainly not advocating that everybody like dogs. Lots of people don't like dogs and that is okay with me. The problem is that in the last fifteen years there has been a shift in where dogs fit into the human universe. Until fifteen years ago, they were considered a necessary part of the landscape. They were like death, taxes, cloudy days, traffic and babies. A part of the landscape that happened when you went out into it.

Now, dogs have shifted over into the category of things that if you don't want them around you are entitled to not have anybody have them around. Without any change in their behavior, they have been moved over into the arena of snakes, unacceptably loud music, sharks, spiders, smoking and sex offenders. You are entitled not to have them in your life. If you come across one, anywhere between you

If Paul Votes, the Southampton Association Will Sue to Throw It All Out

By Dan Rattiner

The two political parties facing one another at each election in the historic Village of Southampton in recent years are the Citizens With Integrity Party and the Good Sense Party. But they might as well be known as the Excellent Party and the Evil Party, although which is which depends upon which side of the fence you are on. Two years ago the Integrity Party was in power with a 3 to 2 majority. Then last year the Good Sense Party held power with a 3 to 2 majority. And now it is back to the Integrity Party. It's been a pretty big struggle.

Fortunately, from an outsider's perspective, the issue appears to be pretty well cut. The Integrity party, in power today, leans toward development and believes in looser zoning regulations that would allow for bigger homes. The party that has just gone out of power believes more in environmentalism and in tighter zoning regulations that would create more open space. On Tuesday night, there was a blood bath. With the new Integrity party back in power, there was a proposal to loosen a whole lot of zoning restrictions. And a whole lot of builders, real estate people and developers got appointed to Village boards. (The two Good Sense Party Trustees in town, one a tax attorney and the other a retired TWA pilot, were powerless to prevent it.)

Specifically, builder Phil Pape and realtor Tom Knight got appointed to the Planning Commission. Sheila Haley, whose son works for Mayor Mark Epley, got appointed to the Architectural Review Board to replace the seat vacated when environmentalist Kathy Bellows was forced out. (Mayor Epley is the developer and owner of Seafield in Westhampton.

business.

As far as the new zoning proposed, its statutes at the meeting were discussed. In general, they will, if passed, repeal the zoning laws that were tightened up when the Good Sense party was in power last year, and then loosen them even further.

For example, an existing 1800 square foot home on a half acre in the village, which could be expanded to 3750 square feet under the tighter old laws passed last year that are now in effect, will be able to be expanded to 4100 square feet.

Other tighter restrictions were loosened. For example, it is being proposed that the square footage of attics, garages, breezeways and certain porches no longer be counted in the allowable square feet. This is a very unusual step and is not in the rules in any other local village on the East End that I know. Also not to be counted are "cathedral" spaces, where a large room, for example, would rise up to an open ceiling two stories up. Since after a building permit is issued and a certificate of occupancy awarded, the inspectors do not return to look at what is done inside, it is easy enough to just build a second floor in the open space to make more rooms. Our hypo-

They might as well be known as the Excellent Party and the Evil Party. Which is which depends on which side of the fence you are on.

Seafield is currently repaying about $2.5 million in Medicaid money to New York State that the state says had been improperly spent. Mrs. Haley's son is an Executive at Seafield.) A fourth appointee, Gerry Ferrara, who also got appointed to the Zoning Board of Appeals, is a businessman. So now, a majority of all the members of all the boards in the Village are in the building contracting or land development

theoretical 1800 square foot house on a half-acre therefore could be as much as 5500 square feet when it is done. Finally, the height allowable for any residence in the Village would be increased. On the half acre, the limit would no longer be 28 feet. It would be 35 feet. (The limit in East Hampton Village is 28 feet.)

In almost every case, the new zoning numbers in Southampton Village will allow larger homes to be built in that town than in similar villages elsewhere. Indeed, the existing zoning regulations, touted as "too restrictive" by the victorious Integrity Party, also allows larger homes to be built in Southampton than in similar villages in the surrounding area. The new zoning just makes the disparity even greater. For example, a house on two acres in East Hampton cannot exceed 9,000 square feet. One in North Haven cannot exceed 8,300 square feet, but a house on two acres in Southampton Village can be built up to 11,200 square feet under the current formula, to 13,000 square feet under the new.

At the meeting on Tuesday night, a warning shot against the Board of Trustees was fired by attorneys representing the Southampton Association, the group of wealthy, old-line homeowners who live in the Estate section of the village and who belong for the most part to the Meadow Club or the Bathing Association.

The attorneys, in papers they presented to the Trustees, warned that it was one thing if everyone in the village benefits from these more liberal zoning changes, but it is against the law if one or more of the five Trustees, who has a special interest that will personally benefit in a much larger fashion, votes it through.

Such a person, the attorneys said, was Paul Robinson, a member of the Board of Trustees who owns eight residential properties in the village, specifically at 749 and 225 Hill Street, 54 Meeting House Lane, 260 Herrick Road, 52 Rogers Avenue, 35 Cameron Street, 275 Old Town Road and 105 Little Plains Road.

If he does not recuse himself from voting on the new zoning proposal, the Southampton Association will file papers to have the zoning proposal thrown out on the grounds that Paul Robinson would benefit personally to a very great extent if this legislation is passed and so therefore there had been a conflict of interest. Mr. Robinson said he would not recuse himself.

Another problem faced by the Integrity Party in running the Village is the Code of Ethics that is currently on the books in Southampton. Regarding the various boards of the Village, it says in section 7-8 that "no person who is in the business of developing land in the Village of Southampton shall be a member of any administrative board appointed by the Board of Trustees." This restriction applies to the Planning Board, the Architectural Review Board, the Historic Preservation Board (until it got merged into the Architectural Review Board) and the Zoning Board of Appeals, so it would apply to builder Steve Dunham and architect/developer Siamak Sammi at the Planning Commission, and realtor Roger Blaugh, the current Chairman of the Board of Architectural Review. It does not apply, of course, to the Building Department, where people such as Daniel Guzewicz, who are knowledgeable in that field, have to work. Mr. Guzewicz has been appointed Chairman of that department. He has been the builder of record for almost all of the projects submitted by Paul Robinson, so he knows his stuff.

As for the ethics guidelines, they can be made to read whatever the Trustees want. That would be a new job for them to tackle.

The villagers who came to the meeting Tuesday night mostly seemed determined to have these new regulations in place so as to enhance the values of the properties they own. Some think that this now will mark the end of the Good Sense Party, and a new political party, more in line with the current agenda in the village, will have to be formed to face the Citizens with Integrity Party. •

Should They Have Allowed the Rock Concert?

By Dan Rattiner

This past Thursday evening, the staff of Dan's Papers held a beach party at Sagg Main to celebrate the end of summer. We had food, a bonfire, some music, several Frisbees and a dog or two. A few members of the staff went out surfing. About seventy people attended.

In many ways, this party on the beach was no different than many other parties out there. During the summer, it's a good guess that along its mile long stretch there are on average, every evening, two family barbecues out on that strand. Assembling at the beach is free, after all, both because this is America and because it is the people of the town that own the beach.

Until a few years ago, indeed, a large beach party for the staff of Dan's Papers certainly was free out at Sagg Main. But in recent years, there's a cost. In Southampton Town, as in all the towns on the East End now, if you are going to assemble with 50 or more people, you have to get a permit. And so you pay the fee (to cover the cost of getting the permit), you send them an insurance waiver so they aren't liable if anybody gets injured, and you provide other information asked for.

Originally, when the towns put in these rules requiring permits for large gatherings, they said the only reason they are requiring them is because they want to know where the parties are so they can help with traffic problems.

(I recall one occasion when I got stuck in the back of a big traffic jam on Cobb Road late one Saturday afternoon. When I finally got up to where the problem was, I found car parkers standing in the middle of the street asking motorists if they were there for Ted Forstmann's Teddy Bear Tennis Tournament and if so could they see their ticket. They asked me. I told them I was trying to get to a Japanese restaurant in Water Mill. That seemed to be all right with them, so they let me through.)

BRIDGEHAMPTON CHILD CARE CENTER IN TROUBLE

By Dan Rattiner

For fifty years, the Bridgehampton Child Care Center has served the less fortunate families of the Bridgehampton community, five days a week, from morning until evening. There is day care for the pre-schoolers, after school care for the elementary school children and a teen program for the high schoolers. There are basketball courts, tennis courts, classrooms and playgrounds. And these programs are free. Traditionally, the kids have been bused to the facility on the Sag Harbor Turnpike at the end of the school day, to be picked up later by the parents. The pre-school-ers are there all day. It has worked out very well. Until this year.

The Monday after Labor Day, on the first day of school this autumn, the Bridgehampton Child Care Center did not open its doors. It remained closed, with no programs for the children, for two weeks after that. And rumors swirled around the community that the Child Care Center was in serious financial straits.

But then, finally, on October 3rd, the facility re-opened, and today this campus of buildings — it was originally a farm — is thriving with children and counselors once again. But it is only because of a $5,000 donation provided by someone with the means to send the money. There are still back bills to deal with and an outstanding and overhanging bank loan to repay. Also there is the need to pay the counselors their salaries for the rest of the school year. The Child Care Center is not out of the woods yet.

The cause of the problem stems from the fact that for many years the Day Care Center was the beneficiary of a large annual fundraiser held by the late newsman Peter Jennings. Programs expanded as a result of his generosity — the donations from the annual Jazz at

I actually went to one of these hearings. The promise was they would never want to keep anybody from having a large gathering. There is in the constitution the right to assemble, after all. So the permits would be free. And nobody would ever deny anyone having one.

Ha, is what I wrote after that hearing. And ha it has turned out to be. Put a new permit in the hands of some bureaucrats and you are asking for it. So today there is the fee, various other requirements and permits are denied all the time. The fact is that in one of our East End towns, which shall remain nameless, there is even a limit to how many gatherings you can have a year on your property. It's three. So that fourth wedding on the lawn for your youngest daughter? Postpone it until next year. Or hold it elsewhere. Sorry about that.

This is not to say that there ought not to be laws involving activities on private or public property. Obviously there needed to be some sort of restraint involved on Cobb Road way back when. And there are other matters of public safety and health. In recent years there have been parties at the Wilzig's in Water Mill and at Diddy's in East Hampton that created such traffic jams that the neighbors could not get through to their homes, and they didn't think it was funny. So there is a fine line to be walked here.

Which brings us to a federal district court decision handed down last week in Central Islip about a rock concert event that got cancelled by the town of Riverhead in 2003. The laws they used to cancel it were these very same laws involving permits, although it came under a sub-clause for the largest sort of gathering, which requires a mass permit. The town denied the permit. The rock concert promoter sued. And now the promoter has won.

The concert was to take place on the former Grumman property in Calverton, which consists of about 3000 now vacant acres. The Beastie Boys, Radiohead and lots of other bands would perform. There would be about 50,000 fans and because the event would last two days, the spectators would be camping out. The town gave a verbal approval for the permit, the concert promoter began selling tickets, even began assembling the stage and sound equipment, and then the town denied the per-and as far away as the eye can see, you just make a few phone calls and the authorities come and take care of it.

Do our dogs deserve this? Are they somehow different than the dogs of yesteryear? I don't think so. But maybe they are. Maybe dogs today are more skittish, more pushy and malevolent, more apt to bite you. I submit that if they are, they are because of a shift in how we treat them. Dogs just want to please. And they want to know where they fit in the pecking order. Give them some rope and they will mit at the last minute. The reason they did so, they said, was because the small Riverhead Police Force was inadequate to do the job. And the County of Suffolk, which had originally said they might send some of their officers over to help out, decided in the end not to.

The judge, in handing down his decision, threw out the Riverhead permit laws. He said they were too broadly written. "(This permit law) gives officials unbridled discretion to deny a permit for any reason they see fit," he wrote. He pointed out one provision in the permit law that said that an applicant could be given a permit if the gathering could be held "without hazard to health or safety," a pretty subjective business. Elsewhere the law reads that officials could issue a permit if "the promoter has made plans for public bathrooms and such other matters as may be appropriate for security for life or health." He considered that vague.

The Town plans to appeal the decision. And ultimately, the Town either will or will not have to pay damages to the promoter, Andrew Dreskin and others, of their firm Field Day. What was assembled had to be taken down, without ever being used. And ultimately the event was re-scheduled and held on a smaller scale at Giants Stadium in New Jersey, so the ticket holders got something for their money.

And finally, I suppose, this mass gathering ordinance will have to be re-written by a lawyer with a head for specific detail and a much sharper pencil than whoever wrote this one.

ask for more rope. It's just human, er, animal nature.

What I really think is that humans have changed. Or anyway humans in America have changed. Somebody the other day told me that this generation thinks that being an American means having the Freedom of (fill in the blank.) Somewhere in the constitution there is a Freedom of Privacy, a Freedom of Health Care, Freedom of Travel, Freedom of Quiet, Freedom of Fencing Myself In, Freedom of Having My Friends Around Me, Freedom of Whatever. Whatever you want there is a Freedom for it. We're Americans. And if I personally don't want a dog anywhere near me, I have the right to my Freedom from Dogs. We have become spoiled rotten. We are the entitled. And we are the worse for it.

This month, October, marks the beginning of the long, wonderful period down at the beach when the dogs can run free wherever they want. They can roll in the fish the surfcasters bring in this fall and leave on the sand. They can chase balls. They can dive into the ocean. And they can just run around in circles barking happily at being allowed out here again. Or they can just bark and chase the birds all around. Even the endangered ones. What a season it is for dogs.

Sagaponack Village to Hold Elections, Spread Its Wings

By David Stoll

Sagaponack Village was officially certified by the State of New York last week, and the Town Clerk appointed Karen Greatrex as acting Village Clerk. Ms. Greatrex will be responsible for arranging and managing elections, in which registered voters of Sagaponack may vote, for the four Village Trustees and Mayor. The election must take place within 60 days and has been scheduled for November 18. After this paper went to press, the election's time and place presumably were posted, as required by law, in at least six locations and a newspaper. The Village boundaries, which track the Sagaponack School District, include those properties at Town Line Road and Hedges Lane previously believed to be part of Wainscott.

So far, Bill Tillotson has announced his candidacy for Mayor, and attorney and Georgica Groins opponent Gary Ireland is considering a run. Lee Foster, Donald Louchheim, Alfred Kelman and Joy Seiger have announced that they plan to run for one of the four trustee positions. Whoever wins the elections will have to determine what services the Village will provide and what services the Town will be asked to provide at cost. Sagaponack Village was promoted as being a "bare bones" village which would look to the Town to provide police, zoning, planning and other functions. Such a Village would not add meaningfully to the residents' tax burden.

On the other hand, nothing other than the voters can stop the Village from taking on whatever responsibilities it wants. Should the residents be unhappy with the Town's responsiveness on any particular issue, they may very well assume more control. Also, parochial concerns may very well rise in importance, without regard to satisfaction with the Town's management of this issue or that.

Perhaps most prominent on people's minds is what will happen to the popular Sagg Main

PEOPLE TO HEAR AGAIN IN SAG HARBOR VILLAGE

By David Stoll

Sag Harbor will soon lose a lovely restaurant and a noisy night club, and have 21 more condos for Sag Harbor lovers. That is because Code Red Developers will buy the restaurant and night club Daniele at 21 Water Street, with plans to tear down the existing structure and build a condominium complex. Although the sale is not final—and there may be bumps along the road—residential neighbors and local officials are delighted, knowing that they finally will have relief from years of late-night noise. Indeed, the Village's attorneys are actively involved in making the deal happen, going so far as to represent the buyers.

It wasn't supposed to be this way. After years of complaints about the nightclub Rocco's and litigation between its owners and Sag Harbor Village, the parties reached an agreement in 2004 requiring the owners to temporarily close the night club, soundproof the interior, limit occupancy and pay money to the Village's parking fund. (Apparently, the Village has one.) Then, as the summer season began in 2005, an Italian/Mediterranean restaurant called Daniele at 21 Water Street opened. With good food and service and a plenty of outdoor seating overlooking the water, the restaurant was a welcome addition to the area. Unfortunately, the ghost of Rocco's returned after dinner ended, with major DJs coming to play loud music throughout the night.

According to neighbors, whatever soundproofing had been added to the structure did nothing, so noise complaints continued throughout the summer. During the 2005 summer season, the club received many citations for noise and parking violations, there were arrests involving drugs, and a man was stabbed in the stomach. Sag Harbor regulars

SAG HARBOR SIGN STREET PARTY SATURDAY

By Brenda Siemer

I was coming out of Yoga Shanti again this morning. The blank, white façade of the Sag Harbor Cinema glares at me every morning. It has become a constant reminder that Sag Harbor's deco icon sign has been missing for nearly a year and a half. The public mantra became "How's the sign?" After three or four sign makers with varying degrees of expertise took a crack at it, I found that they were either short on money, time or know-how. Those three foot high letters required exact templates of the original forms, and that heavy gauge aluminum had to be carefully bent by hand. There was not a rivet or a screw in it, each seam has been hand welded for durability. I went out to the shop to choose the colors that needed to be blended to replicate the blue and red we'd want. In short, I would say, the sign was built in Bay Shore and painted in Parsippany.

In Sag Harbor my personal heroes are playwright Joe Pintauro, who keenly suggested, "Let's go to the power of the press!" the day the original sign was dismounted from the face of the Sag Harbor Cinema. So we did. Later that afternoon it was Christopher Leonard who pursued the Board of Architectural Review's question "Have you got a permit for that thing?" in reference to the new plastic version of the 1930's rusted steel sign. And where would we have been if the guys from Java Nation hadn't lifted the crusty corpse into George Speckenbach's pick-up truck? Thanks to Beth Young from the Sag Harbor Express for her good reporter's eye and ear.

Next morning the police called me, hmm.

But Captain Charles Shawcroft, of Patrick Malloy's Intuition II, saved the day by building a novel boat trailer platform to move the sign off of the Whaling Museum's back lawn where it had been stored overnight, and down to the pier behind Malloy's office for safe keeping. There is one more dedicated fellow, a neon artist named Clayton Orehek, who has shepherded the newly completed welded aluminum treasure from Long Island to New Jersey and back again before beginning the neon installation this week.

My pal Charlie Grubb at Letter Perfect drew on his photo talents to make that beautiful poster and invitation for Ed Kleefield's JLX Bistro dinner he contributed for my fundraising. At that dinner Curt Hoppe of East Hampton contributed two paintings of the sign that Roy Scheider of Sagaponack auctioned off. Say, did I mention that Gwen Waddington at the Wharf Shop collected dollar bills in a jar to contribute to the SAVE THE SIGN campaign? Thank you one and all.

It's not Katrina and New Orleans, but the Sag Harbor Cinema sign has become a symbol of the durable character of the good people of Sag Harbor. As John A. Ward said this morning, "I remember that sign very well! When I was a boy in the 1930s we had never seen anything like that before. There were no trees and the glow of that sign lit up the whole downtown." And so it shall again. This has been a real exercise in determination and community for me. Beautiful. Thanks.

Join us Saturday October 15, 2005 for a street party, 5:30 p.m. in honor of the mounting of the Sag Harbor sign.

Next week we will publish a list thanking all those who worked so hard to make this possible.
—ed.

New Children's Museum Holds Grand Opening in Bridgehampton

By Robin F. Smith

They say there is no sound more beautiful than the sound of children's laughter. If you include squealing, screeching with delight, the pounding of hurried footsteps, the clanging of bells hit with mallets, the thuwump of jumping from high places, the mimicking of a fire engine whistle, the yelp of the startled balloon popper and the delight of discovering a world created just for you, then the long-awaited opening of the Children's Museum of the East End (CMEE) in Bridgehampton on Saturday was pure bliss.

At 11 a.m. in front of the funky new building designed by Lee H. Skolnick Architecture and

Design, the First Baptist Church of Bridgehampton's Choir sang gospel selections, including "Oh, Happy Day," and families gathered beneath a tent set up to shield them from the drizzly day, joining in the hand-clapping and celebratory chorus. The heartfelt and genuinely relieved speeches followed, when a few of the "seven moms," who conceived of the idea for CMEE, spoke of the long path to success that they had traveled. Seven years ago, a small committee of parents and community luminaries decided, aptly, to create a fun and educational indoor place for kids on the East End to spend a rainy day. For years CMEE was a "museum without walls," creating traveling programs and exhibitions. But the ultimate goal, a permanent home, remained elusive until locals Arlene and Alan Alda donated the 12-acre parcel that is the museum's home today.

Beatrice Alda, their daughter and one of the "founding moms," read a statement from her father, who congratulated everyone who worked so diligently for so long to make their dream a reality. Adrienne Kitaeff, executive director of CMEE, spoke last, comments echoing the sentiments of all the speakers, who seemed truly pleased by the end result of their efforts and truly appreciative of all those who

MONTAUK MOURNS COASTGUARDSMAN KILLED IN IRAQ

By David Lion Rattiner

It was a lonely Saturday in Iraq on April 24, 2004. Former Montauk Coast Guardsman, Nathan Bruckenthal, was doing his second tour of duty. The 6'2", 220-lb, 25-year-old, who was in his sixth year for the Coast Guard and who grew up on Long Island, was scanning the waters in his six man boat as he was spying the waters for any attackers. He was protecting the Basura oil terminal, a target for many of the insurgents in Iraq.

Off in the distance he spotted a suspicious boat heading right for the oil terminal and he responded appropriately, having intentions of intercepting the boat and inspecting who and what was on board. This was a pretty normal operation for the young Coast Guardsman, who was also a member of the Tactical Law Enforcement Team. The Tactical Law Enforcement Team is one of the most difficult jobs in Coast Guard. They are a unit of the Coast Guard that is responsible for intercepting boats off American waters and inspecting them for drugs and contraband. The Navy had hired him from the Coast Guard because of his expertise with boarding unknown vessels and making sure that they were safe. Before his tours in Iraq, Nathan had spent time in Central and South America, in waters where drug smuggling is a way of life, and worked there inspecting boats for drugs. This was a man with experience dealing with dangerous vessels and dangerous people and it was for this reason that the Navy wanted him in Iraq so badly. If there was anybody who could prevent this boat from reaching the oil terminal, Nathan Bruckenthal could.

As his ship got closer to one of the three boats heading towards the oil terminal, his crew noticed that it was slow moving and did not appear to have anyone onboard, an immeturned out for the opening. The ribbon was cut, the flashbulbs exploded, and the doors opened.

The children were divided into four groups who shifted in thirty-minute increments throughout the museum. The intention was to have everyone experience all the offerings in a somewhat organized manner, but it was plain to see after just a little while that it was not to be. There was just too much excitement, and too many kids with too many different ideas of what is fun to quietly coordinate them through.

Joined by my sister, four-year-old nephew and one-year-old niece, I was in for the full experience. We did as we were asked, at least initially, and began exploring the permanent exhibit and galleries. CMEE is thematically tied to the history and culture of the eastern end of Long Island and we found the story of the potato, from "birth to potato chip," in a hands-on exhibit, spied a seagull through a periscope, and sailed the seas on a giant boat in the center of the room. We also worked behind the cash register of a farmstand, flashed the headlights of a large-scale replica of a fire engine, played wind and percussion instruments in the musical forest, and climbed on the huge books in the library. We also made sock puppets in a classroom, rocked out and shook maracas to the music of Brady Rhymer, beloved for his kid friendly tunes, and watched a puppet show in the lobby.

Designed to spark the imagination and expose kids to all facets of life in our area, the museum offers several different environments to learn about, from the wetland and woodlands outside that you traverse on the boardwalk entryway, to the seashore, farms and forest replicas inside. There is a lighthouse and a windmill, and an over-sized garden of creatures. The combination of low-tech and high tech wonders ensures that kids of all ages and curiosity levels will find something stimulating to explore.

Coming soon are workshops, classes and temporary exhibits, and to the Arlene and Alan Alda Amphitheater, luxurious with grass covered seats, a variety of dance, music, movies, lectures and evenings of stargazing.

CMEE is located at 376 Bridge/Sag Turnpike. Call 631-537-8250, or visit www.CMEE.org. The museum is open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, and on Sundays from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Friday is late night, and the museum stays open until 7:30 p.m. Closed Tuesdays.

diate warning sign to the crew that there could be explosives onboard. More alert than ever, their boat drew closer to inspect the boat. But before Nathan could get on board the boat, the entire ship detonated in a large explosion. The explosion was so powerful that it sent Nathan's boat into the air, flipping the six-man ship and instantly killing two of the Navy sailors that were on board the boat with Nathan. Nathan, however, was still breathing but was not in good condition. He suffered extensive injuries and was picked up by fellow soldiers who offered help. His injuries were too much however. He fought on until the next day, when he was pronounced dead.

Nathan Bruckenthal was the first Coast Guardsman to be killed in action since the Vietnam War. He left behind his wife and his unborn daughter.

The deaths of the young men and women in Iraq are stories that we read about all too often in a troubled world. However, the Montauk Coast Guard Station will not forget

Who's Here

By Robin F. Smith

What makes a great movie? Often, it's a great story. Perhaps it's no coincidence that the life story, thus far, of Rajendra Roy, Director of Programming for the Hamptons Film Festival, is the stuff great movies are made from. Now in his fourth year at HIFF, Raj has the enviable task of choosing all 170 films that are shown at the annual event, culled down from thousands of entries in a process that takes a year. Films in the 13th Annual Hampton Film Festival, which runs from October 19 through October 23, are required to have been made after September 2004. The selections were chosen by Raj in August of this year.

"I have a trusted colleague who chooses the shorts and fifteen screeners whose taste and knowledge I know and respect who weed through the other films before me, and then when they get it down to about 2000-3000, it's my turn. I see all of those films, and make the choices. I've been very fortunate to have the trust of Denise and Stuart so that I can work this way, and help to create a specific voice, perspective and focus. Every other festival is programmed by committee."

The festival's beloved founders, Denise Kasell and Stuart Match Suna, "were determined to slog through, even when the going was tough, to make this the well-respected industry and social event that it is. That's why we are all here today."

At the time it was all beginning, Raj was graduating from UCSD in San Diego, with plans to move to New York City to follow his passion as a performance artist. That was quite a leap from the unusual childhood he and his sister spent on a commune in Loma Linda, California.

Raised as Seventh Day Adventists by an Indian father, who had been converted in his homeland by missionaries, and a Dutch mother, Raj and his sister, Rachel, now a fashion designer who is married to hip-hop mogul Damon Dash, lived on a farm with lots of different people who held lots of different perspectives.

"That religion is really a combination of Christianity, Judaism and the Mormon faith. You don't smoke, you don't drink, you don't eat meat, you keep kosher.....these are good values to learn, but the actual teachings are dogmatic. You pay for your sins later," he laughs.

Surprisingly, Raj's path, that took him from those humble beginnings to the level where he finds himself at now, was not the result of careful planning or an aim for a particular goal. "I don't consider myself to be an 'intellectual' per se, nor do I have a film degree. My experience has been all hands-on, and any success I've had has been a combination of circumstances – great opportunities have come my way, and I've found some wonderful people to mentor me, who've made all the difference. So it's come about in a very organic way. Everything just felt right when it happened."

There are high expectations.

Upon arriving in New York, Raj took a job selling tickets at the Guggenheim Museum, and then in his free time became involved in MIX, the Manhattan based experimental gay and lesbian event, soon rising to director and holding this position for four years. With his experience and reputation building, he was approached by the head film curator at the Guggenheim, and was invited to work in that department. He became the Film and Media Arts Program Manager. It was after 9/11, when art projects in the city basically came to a grinding halt, that Raj made the transition to HIFF. He met with Denise and they hit it off.

Fast forward to today. The Hamptons International Film Festival is in a dual spotlight, having become the "place to be" in October, both for the "industry," people who come out to discover cutting-edge talent and find films for distribution, and the filmmakers who want their work to be seen here. Plus, there's the growing support in the community that welcomes the influx of creativity and entertainment.

"New York and Hollywood come together here, and it's an audience that knows film. There are high expectations. It's a very sophisticated crowd with opinions. They know what's what."

He continued, "I came into the Hamptons as an outsider, with no connections to a particular group, no loyalty to any cliques, and not from money. It was my job to further build the market for the Film Festival, to create the need to be in the Hamptons for these movies and the events surrounding them. I have to satisfy the filmmakers, the industry and myself."

After the surprising mainstream box office success last year of Open Water, which took in $50 million after finding distribution following its premiere at the Festival in the last slot on the last day, HIFF's value has been ratcheted up several notches. Two screeners watched the movie when it was sent in unsolicited with no introduction by the husband and wife team who made it with a tiny budget. One screener hated it and one loved it. Raj made the call, and the rest, as they say, is history.

Now, with the buzz from that success, as well as the distribution and reviews of other 2004 films like Fighting Tommy Riley and The Untold Story of Emmett Louis Till, HIFF is being taken seriously. The films get picked up and have a life outside the festival.

"It's really important to have world premieres like that. We want to attract people in the know, people in the business who can't see these films anywhere else. Though it's kind of scary this year; the level of attention is a bit overwhelming. Everyone is going to be here. We have to maintain our same standard of excellence that I think we achieved in prior years, but now on a much larger scale."

This year, there are 27 World Premieres across all categories, and 4 World Premieres in the Spotlight section, including Gideon's Daughter, starring Miranda Richardson, Bill Nighly and Emily Blunt; Boynton Beach Bereavement Club, directed by Susan Seidelman and Shleey Gitlow, and Piggy Banks, directed by Morgan J. Freeman. There is a total of 17 Spotlights, and for the first time, international and national films are competing together in the same category.

Raj has spent about 3 months in a rented house in East Hampton that he loves, but after the Film Festival closes, he is off to Berlin for about the same length of time. It is his second year as the youngest member and only American on the selection committee of the Berlin Film Festival. After that, he heads back to New York for a few months, to the same apartment on Rivington Street on the Lower East Side where he has lived for 11 years. Then, it's back on the road. "I travel a couple of months a year. Meeting people and seeing the creative process in action. It's crazy, but it's great."

Just like the range of films we've come to expect at HIFF.

Nathan and the duty that he served for his country.

On Monday, nearly three hundred people showed up to the Coast Guard Station in Montauk. There were news reporters, friends, family and fellow guardsmen, all of them there to dedicate one of the buildings at the Montauk station to their fallen friend and to show their respects for the fallen hero.

There is an old saying, Coast Guardsmen don't get killed, Marines get killed. Unfortunately for Nathan and his family, this was not the case. The ceremony lasted a couple of hours as everyone who was there told their memories of Nathan and what a good person he was. They talked about how he was trying to follow in his father's footsteps as a public servant. They talked about how he wanted to be a cop or a fireman because he has always had an innate desire to help people. They talked about what a good husband he was. They talked about what a good father he would have made. They talked about what a good friend he was. They talked about his dedication to the service and the honor that he carried along with it. They talked about the time he spoke at his old high school about what it was like to be in the Coast Guard and how he inspired so many kids. They talked about how sad it was that he was gone.

The emotional scene at the Montauk Coast Guard Station gave everyone a strange combinations of emotions. There was sadness mixed with pride and there was anger mixed with happy memories.

The building that was dedicated, which proudly bears his name, was unveiled to the public and was greeted with applause. The ceremony was inspiring and beautiful. We hope there will be no need for any more.

TWENTYSOMETHING... By David Lion RATTNER

I'm Sorry I Was Late

You aren't going to believe this but you have to believe me because I have really had a rough morning. Please just let me explain myself to you before you do anything drastic.

Okay, ummm...So I was walking down Newtown Lane in East Hampton on my way to get a cup of coffee at The Golden Pear. I was up bright and early as I usually am on a Monday so that I can get to work early.

While ordering the cup of coffee inside the Golden Pear I noticed a group of teenagers dressed up in Halloween costumes were walking down the street. They appeared to be armed with eggs, shaving cream and spaghetti sauce. I looked down at my watch and noticed that it said the tenth of October. I know what you are thinking. You are thinking why would these teenagers be walking down the street in broad daylight and why would they be doing this before Halloween started? I was thinking the same thing, but I'm telling you they were all dressed up in costumes.

When I saw them, I quickly grabbed my coffee and proceeded to spill it all over my pants. This was pure black coffee, this wasn't coffee that had some milk in it so that it wasn't that hot, this was ridiculously hot coffee. I screamed in the middle of The Golden Pear briefly and then decided to just ditch the coffee and run outside. I was really worried about these teenagers and my car.

When I got outside, the worst thing that could possibly be happening to me happened.

All five of the teenagers had surrounded my car like a bunch of bees and started throwing eggs at it. My car was being completely egged in broad daylight. I was so dumbfounded I found myself just standing there watching. Right before my eyes they were egging the car, quickly, making sure to hit all sides of it. Then one of them opened up a can of spaghetti sauce and dumped it into the crack in the window. This jerk was dumping spaghetti sauce all over interior of my car. I couldn't believe this. "Hey, stop that!" I yelled out.

It was at this point that another unbelievable thing happened. The second that I yelled at this group of vicious human beings all five of them pulled out paintball guns. I started to run for cover but it was too late. They started blasting yellow and red paintballs at me from about fifty feet away. I got hit in the back and in the neck and finally made it behind a car. Other people in the street started running for cover, too, as the rabid teenagers were hooting and hollering. Finally a cop showed up and they all split up in five different directions. All of them had disappeared before the cop could even radio to others what had just happened.

I was bewildered, but noticed on my watch that I was really late for work. The police officer asked me if I wanted a ride home to get cleaned up but I told him that I would just jump into the ocean to rinse off and get to work. As I got in my car, my pants squished in the spaghetti sauce. I thought about going to the car wash but realized that I was running way too late. On Rte. 27, I drove over a bunch of nails in the road and both my front and back tires went flat. I tried to grind along on the rims, but I wasn't able to get the speed required to stay on the road so I got out on the side of the road and ditched the car. My logic was that I would just get to it later.

I stuck out my thumb and started hitchhiking. I figured that this was my best and only option for getting to work at a reasonable time. It took about twenty minutes or so before anyone stopped. Finally a large van with a rough looking guy in a sweatshirt stopped to pick me up. I got in the car and told him that I was headed for Dan's Papers. The guy didn't

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #370

Java Jive

One of the greatest inventions of man is the auto-timer on a coffeepot. It's amazing how you can hear the soft click of the pot turning on, through any depth of sleep. It's like a dimmer switch inside your head that is gradually turning your lights on. By the time I can smell the coffee, I've got my hair pinned up and I'm nearly dressed. I scream at my kids to get up, which helps clear my throat so I'm ready for a nice day of yelling at them, talking over people I dislike, and cursing at things that don't work. I owe the smooth flow of my day to the auto-timer on my coffeepot.

But recently, when one of my brothers and I decided to move in together because he found the year round rental on the Island before I did, my coffeepot was broken in the move. He said, "Don't worry, I've got a coffeepot. I get up earlier than you, I'll make the coffee." That's what he said.

But men lie.....they lie and they are sadistic. Sometimes there is coffee in the morning waiting for me and sometimes not. On the mornings when I have to make it myself, I am forced into the battle I hate. First, you put in the water, which I forget to do sometimes until I smell coffee grounds baking. Sometimes I put in the water, but forget the coffee and come into the kitchen for a cup of coffee tinted hot water. If I do remember to put in the grounds,

I have to confront that monster we all hate...the compressed stack of coffee filters. I believe there is a layer of weak glue between each coffee filter in the stack. Not enough for you to be certain the filters are glued together, but enough to make you battle for a single filter. The best you can do is pull out two or three stuck together and then you have to massage them to separate them and stuff one back into the plastic bag, if you can. The first cursing heard in any household is done by the poor tired soul who was just trying to get out one lousy coffee filter! Eventually, I will get the coffee and the filter and the water into the pot at the same time. I flip the 'on' switch and the little red light speaks to me, "Be calm, I bring forth the miracle of coffee. Your quest for consciousness is nearly ended."

When there is coffee ready and waiting for me in the morning, I am happy. I am happy until I realize that I cannot get the top off of the honey jar. To fight off allergies, I have a teaspoon of Mr. Kilb's honey in my coffee every morning (say what you will, it works great for me). Unless someone, who shall go unnamed, has torqued the top of the jar on so tight I can't get it off even after running it under hot water.

When I complain to him at the end of the day that he screwed the lid on too tight again, he laughs. He laughs because men are sadistic, they just love knowing that even though a woman can run a corporation, she still can't open a jar. It's this sick little moment of superiority they all enjoy. I have rubber grippers and a clamp jar opener and it is still a major battle to get a lid off in this house! This is why I have never remarried, I like to be able to open jars and I am not willing to go to 'Defcom 4' if the TV remote is missing.

Last Friday morning, there was no coffee again. So I started to make coffee and I thought I'd scramble some eggs too. As I cracked and dropped an egg into a freshly poured, honeyless, cup of coffee, I realized I needed professional help to make breakfast. So I went to Pat & Steve's. They are caring breakfast professionals who help the morning impaired. Nurse Clarissa gave me coffee, eggs, bacon and even toast. I never have toast because if I successfully make myself coffee, eggs and bacon, I don't want to jinx it by going for toast.

I am buying a new coffeepot with a timer. I will set it up the night before as usual. I will be like Winnie the Pooh and keep my jar of honey in my room, and if anyone touches it, I will break his hands with a mallet.

Jennings fundraiser — accounted for nearly one third of the working budget of the Child Care Center in 2003. (The balance came from grant programs and from generous donations from government agencies.)

Then, in 2004, three things happened. The Jazz at Jennings fundraiser was not held. The programs at the Child Care Center continued in the belief that new funding would materialize. And attempts at grant writing and fundraising were too little and too late. Soon, the center was caught up in playing financial catch up.

Last December, I dressed up in a rough approximation of Santa Claus — I said I was his younger brother — and distributed bags of toys directly to the children at the East Hampton Day Care Center, the Retreat in East Hampton and the Bridgehampton Child Care Center. This newspaper, as it has for many years, holds an annual toy drive, collecting toys from generous citizens in big boxes in the

MISSION STATEMENT

The Bridgehampton Child Care and Recreational Center is a not-for-profit organization serving, for the most part, the lower income and growing immigrant populations in the Bridgehampton and surrounding communities. It is the purpose of the Center to deliver the highest quality childcare, youth and adult development services to the community. By offering educational and recreational programs we can motivate the children and participating adults to achieve their maximum potential.

Care Center. I said sure, thinking that perhaps I could help with publicity.

I attended Board meetings in the spring, playing a sort of peripheral role in the organization. But then, in the summer, things got worse, and the Chairman of the Board resigned. Then, to my amazement I found we had not opened our doors. Why? We could not lobby of local retail establishments. Many of the toys go to the Little Flower Children and Family Services in Wading River. But some of them I distribute directly. It frankly feels wonderful to dress up as Santa Claus (sort of) and hand toys to little kids.

My exploits had apparently not gone unnoticed, however. In February, I stopped at the Carvel in Bridgehampton for an ice cream cone and while there, I was approached by Paul Jeffers, an elder in the Bridgehampton turnpike community, who wanted to know if I would like to be on the Board of Directors of the Bridgehampton Child hire counselors for the after school program because we could not pay them the $12 an hour. I had no idea it had come to that.

And so now, I am writing this article. Paul Jeffers is the new Chairman of the Board. And I am taking an active interest and assisting in every way that I can. I have looked into the finances of the organization and all it is, or was, was a matter of not downsizing fast enough after the loss of the Jennings donations. Now, the Board has done the downsizing. And the organization has to recover and move on. And so I am appealing to everyone and anyone who is reading this. In a community such as this one, with the resources it has in hand, it is unacceptable to me that there not be a Bridgehampton Child Care program on the Turnpike for the working parents of that local community.

In the next few days, please send a check for whatever you can — no donation is too small — to help the Child Care Center. Make checks out to the Bridgehampton Child Care and Recreational Center and mail them to BCCRC, Box 1197, 551 Sag Harbor Turnpike, Bridgehampton, NY 11932.

And if you would like to be contacted to perhaps help out in any further way — the center will be looking for a venue to hold a cocktail party fundraiser, it could use a few more people with strong connections on the board, and it could use some volunteers from time to time — please attach a note.

respond when I said this and I started to feel really uncomfortable in the car. I then asked him to pull over and let me out which he refused to do. We then drove right by the office and I started to panic, as I realized that this guy was probably trying to kidnap me. So I did what any normal person would do, I opened the door while the car was moving and jumped out onto the street. After a couple of rolls on the street and after dodging a couple of cars I ran the two or so miles back along 27 and finally made it to work. I know that I am two hours late, but as you can see, I have had quite a morning.

There I was in Dan Rattiner's office. He seemed to be buying the story. "That is quite the story," he said. "I guess I can understand why you were late then. Okay, is there anything else?"

"Yes," I said. "I just saved a bunch of money on my car insurance by switching to Geico."

Beach. Before Sagaponack was incorporated, Sagg Main beach was one of several Town beaches with a large parking lot and facilities. Town residents displaying a Town beach sticker have been entitled to park at Sagg Main. According to Town Councilman Dennis Suskind, because the Sagg Main parking facilities are actually owned by the Town (in a more specific way than the Town controls regular streets, for example), the creation of the village does not place the parking lot under the jurisdiction of the new Village Trustees, unless the Town were to make a specific conveyance to them. The Town will continue to maintain Sagg Main beach for Town residents.

Anyway, even if Sagaponack had the right to control the parking lot, given that the Village plans to use Southampton's police force and code enforcement team, it makes sense for Sagg Main to remain under Town control;

Town officials would have little interest in ensuring that non-Sagaponack Town residents stay away from such a popular beach.

All the questions about what kind of Village Sagaponack will become will be answered with time. For now, let the residents of the Southampton Township congratulate the Sagaponack residents on the formation of their new Village and also thank them for putting an end to Dunehampton.

People

complained about "New Jersey"-like crowds with their gold chains, brought in by slick stretch S.U.V.s. Local restaurant owners complained that their own crowds during 21 Water's big nights were much more noisy and boisterous than typical for Sag Harbor. In fact, one Main Street restaurant owner received a citation for noise this summer for the first time in the restaurant's history.

Code Red will seek a variance from the Zoning Board of Appeals, as the site is zoned for a restaurant, not a residential complex.

Given the support local residents are expressing for the project, Zoning approval is expected. Beyond that, the new condos are being designed to comply with all of the zoning rules, including rising no more than the maximum height of 35 feet. There will be parking in the back, and some of the 21 units will have their own garages. The complex will have a mix of 2- and 3-bedroom apartments, some of which will have private pools and others of which will share a roof-top pool. The new owners also hope to build a walkway along the water, so people will not have to walk along the street.

This writer will miss the restaurant located at 21 West Water Street; there is always room in the Hamptons for additional businesses offering quality food and service, particularly during the summer season. But night clubs have no place operating in residential areas, including the part of Sag Harbor where Rocco's and Daniele have tormented their neighbors, so one cannot mourn the restaurant's passing for too long.

The Culinary Institute...How Sweet It Is

Riverhead Plans On State-Of-The-Art Culinary School

By R.B. Stuart

The projected opening date is January 2007 for the expansion of the Suffolk County Community Culinary Institute in Riverhead. It will not only produce a host of new talented Chefs from the Long Island area, but because the 30,000 square foot building will be state-of-the-art, it could just as well be used as a television set, filming live cook-offs.

Eight outstanding chefs are already on board, currently teaching classes there and continuing into the expansion. After the expansion, another seven Chefs will be added to their faculty. These skilled and highly trained professionals will bring to the table teachings in the international culinary arts from the Cordon Bleu in Paris, Johnson and Wales University Culinary Arts and of course New York's own Culinary Institute of America. Besides their years of training, they will offer the invaluable asset of work experience; Chef David Dombroff, proprietor of Rolling Pin Bakery in Setauket, Chef Todd Jacobs, proprietor of Tierra Mar in West Hampton, Executive Chef Jeff Trujillo of Tweed's and Chef Aristodemos Pavlou whose family owns Coeur des Vignes. By 2007 with the expected 15 Chefs teaching they may produce the future Bobby Flay, Emeril or even Julia Childs.

There are currently 80 full or part time students attending the Culinary Institute, and in 2007 they plan to triple enrollment in the first four years and are capable of handling up to 200 students. If you feel Betty Crocker trapped inside and want to start planning loans or saving your change, for a full time one-year tuition you'll need $2,999.

They will offer a degree in the following three categories: Culinary Arts and Restaurant Management, Bakery and Pastry Arts and Hotel and Resort Management. In addition they'll have a one-year certificate for students only wanting the "hands-on" programs and will earn 28 credits. For those prospective winemakers, they'll also have Professional Wine Studies in which you'll study wine from all over the world along with Long Island wines including everything pertaining to wine. For those who want to change careers, there will be a retraining program. During the summer of 2007 there will be a kids camp for cooking called a Young Chef's Program, for children 10-13.

And what you'll have access to in this $5.3 million dollar baking heaven will be two floors with 30,000 square feet. The first floor will contain a 60 seat demonstration theatre, four classes that will open up to a 100-seat special function room, a dedicated culinary arts lab, a baking and pastry arts lab and a bakers workshop café and bistro that will open up to an atrium area. The café, seating 35, will be an area where the public can sit and taste some of the delectables coming out of the school such as pastries, artisans breads and sandwiches. The second floor will house additional classrooms, student study areas and faculty offices.

Parr Development will build this expansion on the parcel of land that sits in an L shape on Roanoke Ave., Main St. and the municipal parking lot. The Bakers Workshop Café and Bistro will have a Main St. entrance allowing the downtown lunch crowd a place to sit and eat their scrumptious creations. This will allow the students a chance to be involved in the service industry and interact with the array of customers they will encounter once they reach the work force. The students will be guided on how to handle unfortunate everyday situations in customer service.

Part of their Mission Statement for the college is, "To train as well as educate. For people who would like to change careers or who want to supplement their income by learning a new skill." Suffolk County Community College Culinary Institutes Culinary Arts Program Director of five years, Richard Freilich, explained, "We're going to be giving Riverhead a lot of education for students for the local downtown businesses. Other businesses should take notice and realize that. Things will start changing with the revitalization of Riverhead. For we will be sending these educated individuals out into the workforce, and the businesses will be there to welcome them.

"We're modeling this school after the Culinary Institute of America. There's more jobs than there are students, so we're trying to fill that gap," Freilich said.

"In the Bakers Workshop we're going to promote local produce, organic products and environmentally friendly packaging. These are the changes happening in the industry right now and we have to be creative and take advantage of it," Freilich concluded.

As Martha would say, "And That's a Good Thing."

"Canvassing Riverhead" Art Auction

Art, Wine and Food Coming To Martha Clara Vineyards

By Rachel Giambanco

Armed with paintbrushes and canvass, local artists will recreate the picturesque landscapes of Riverhead in the annual "Canvassing Riverhead" art auction. Sponsored by the Riverhead Chamber of Commerce, the East End Arts Council (EEAC) and Martha Clara Vineyards, the event will take place on Saturday, October 15th during the hours between 12:00 and 2:00 p.m. artists will be creating their work while stationed around the towns of Jamesport, Aquebogue, Baiting Hollow, Calverton, Wading River and Riverhead.

Later in the day, while the paint dries, their artwork will be displayed for preview in the art barn at Martha Clara Vineyards. While enjoying a cocktail reception and a sampling of Martha Clara's finest wines, art connoisseurs and amateurs alike will be milling about the room deciding which pieces of work they will bid on in an hour's time.

"Canvassing Riverhead" is an event that promotes both local artists and the place they call home, the town of Riverhead. Purchasing your $25 ticket in advance ensures that you receive a map of the artist's locations, so you can see them in action, as well as an auction paddle, glass of wine, hors d'oeuvres and dancing. You can also purchase your tickets at the door for $30. Children 12 and under are $10.

The EEAC and the Riverhead Chamber of Commerce could not have chosen a better place to host the event than Martha Clara Vineyards, which is located on Sound Ave in Riverhead. Martha Clara boasts one of the largest galleries on the North and South Forks, and being a company committed to the community, they are donating the use of their facilities for the function. Knowing that the vineyard plays host to many charitable events throughout the year, I inquired why they did this. I was very impressed by the simple, yet poignant way Mr. Bob Kern, general manager of the vineyard, responded. "We don't turn down the community."

When I first arrived at Martha Clara Vineyards, I strolled around the main building, wanting to get a "feel" for the place. Even though it was a drizzly day, the spacious wine-tasting area, and the private wine-tasting section above, was bustling with activity. The gift shop was filled with different types of goodies, from hand-blown glassware, jams, jellies, crafts, kitchen and wine accessories, to a wide variety of Martha Clara wines.

While examining some items near the counter, Beverly Tricomi, a weekend employee, was all smiles when she asked if I needed assistance. I introduced myself and shortly thereafter, Mr. Bob Kern came over to speak with me. We walked around the premises, while he explained the uses of the various buildings and the history and activities of the vineyard. Even though his cell phone was constantly reminding him he was a busy man, he continued on with me as if I were his only appointment. He introduced me to his event coordinator, Bridget Quinn, whom I had seen in vari-

The facade of this restaurant is the epitome of understatedness and I still am never quite sure of its precise location until I am right on top of it. Inside the atmosphere is one of quiet comfort and elegance and the candle lit tables and soft but interesting background music adds to the overall ambience that makes you feel immediately relaxed.

Dennis McDermott and his partner Hank Tomashevski are now in their fourth year in this restaurant that they created and which has won many plaudits and a devoted clientele. Naturally, the choice of first class fresh ingredients and consistent standards of cooking are vitally important but Dennis highlighted the need for a superlative standard of service as the key factor that lifts a restaurant from being good to excellent and who could argue with that comment. Certainly Lisa, who looked after us during our meal, and her colleagues, showed that they really knew the dishes, which change daily, and their preparation. They also could discuss wine choices very well. On a busy evening the whole dining room runs with well-trained proficiency.

The menu, which is under Hank's supervision, is commendably short but extremely well balanced. We started with yellow carrot and ginger soup and immediately realized that we were in for a great evening. The soup had a beautiful color and excellent texture, tasting of carrots. Oysters from the West and East coasts came with a green apple mignonette. I tasted one of the Kumomotos and decided that these were so incredibly good that they needed absolutely nothing with them. The same also went for the East Coast Malpaques. In a close contest my vote went to the West Coast in this case. There were several very interesting appetizers such as a shredded duck quesadilla with grilled red onions and fontina cheese and buckwheat crepes with wild mushrooms and poblano chili sauce. However, we had to try the stuffed artichoke with merguez sausage, currant and pecan stuffing. This crispy rendition was very flavorful and the stuffing did not overwhelm the natural taste of the baby artichoke.

With our appetizers we drank a Pinot Bianco from the Alto Aldige region of Italy that was crisp and fruity. We also tried a very good Sauvignon Blanc from New Zealand. Dennis puts a lot of effort into the choice of wines. The resulting wine list is short like the menu, but is a fascinating mix of countries and varietals. Tocai Fruilano from Italy and Long Island, Verdejo from Spain, Assyrtiko and Xinomavro from Greece, Grenache from Spain and Washington State are just some of the fascinating choices and of course all of the standard varietals are well represented.

For the main courses we had a piece of wonderful local striped bass seared to perfection and served with a mélange of roasted multi-colored beets and mashed potatoes. Now, I am an unashamed potato addict and I have to say that if there are better mashed potatoes than the ones served here, I have not found them. They tasted like potatoes used to taste, the texture was perfect and the use of some excellent olive oil, added another dimension.

Veal Paillard comprised of veal cutlets pounded very thinly and then simply grilled and served with herb mustard butter and excellent vegetables. The Dolcetto from Piedmont was full-bodied and very smooth with a long taste and the Merlot from Jason's Vineyard here on Long Island was extremely good.

For dessert we chose the pumpkin crème caramel, which took a classic dish and gave it a truly autumnal flavor, and a scrumptious pear noisette tart with chantilly cream that exemplified the art of the pastry chef.

Appetizers range from $8 to $16; main courses from $23 to $31 and desserts are $8. Wines by the glass are from $8 to $12 and by the bottle they start at $36.

Overall this was an exceptionally good meal and the common factor throughout all of the dishes was that nothing masked the intrinsic tastes of the primary ingredients, the striped bass, the veal, even the humble carrots and potatoes tasted as they should. Presentation of the dishes was attractive without being ostentatious but nothing here is ostentatious because both Dennis and Hank have a refreshing attitude to food and eating which probably is another good reason for the success of the Frisky Oyster.

ous stages of my tour busily working. After giving me the highlights of the "Canvassing Riverhead" event, she hurried off to tend to the upcoming wedding reception that evening, the cooking demo, hosted by Buoy One in Riverhead, and the African art exhibit with artwork from African Hemingway Gallery in New York City.

Looking up at the overcast sky, Mr. Kern told me that his type of business is really contingent on the weather. "If it wasn't drizzling and it was about five degrees warmer today, the vineyard would be even busier than it is." When asked about projected business during the upcoming "Canvassing Riverhead" event he said. "The art exhibit is its own draw," and with a smile, "It's weather-proof." He couldn't give me an exact number of attendees from last year, but said the event was a tremendous success as every painting was sold!

I inquired as to which wine was the most popular at Martha Clara, but Mr. Kern was hard-pressed to give an answer saying: "it depends on your taste." Seeing that I wasn't going to get an answer from him, I asked which was his favorite wine. "I like them all."

Exasperated, I asked, "Well, which one would you recommend?"

Without missing a beat he responded, "All of them."

As I was about to leave, I asked him if he had anything else he wanted to tell our readers. His response? "Tell them to come out!" ### Coeur des Vignes L'Hotel & Restaurant Francais Is Closing Its Doors

By R.B. Stuart

You've never had French cuisine until you've had the Pavlou experience. After seven years, the family-owned Coeur des Vignes L'Hotel & Restaurant Francais will be closing its doors on Saturday evening October 29, 2005. Proprietors George and Donna Marie Pavlou and acclaimed French Chef, their son, Aristodemus of Southold said, "We want to thank all of our wonderful customers."

With their gracious hospitality you can see why they've received so many accolades and dedicated customers to the restaurant and inn over the years. The Pavlou's innate eagerness to share and please is felt throughout, and will be missed by its many loyal followers.

George Pavlou, a Greek native from Cyprus, has a 50-year history in the restaurant and hotel business working at The Savoy Hotel in London serving Charlton Heston and others, and also working aboard Cunard cruise lines elite Queen Elizabeth and Queen Mary.

His wife Donna Marie, a chic New Yorker with English elegance, Italian flair and an Irish, no-nonsense approach, is the glue that holds this trio together. She has a double Master's degree in nursing and health care, with the natural talent of a baker, giving her the ability to make wedding cakes, pastry and chocolate. It is obvious Arie inherited his love and understanding for good food and the gift for creating French cuisine from her. Cyprus is where George and Donna Marie met, were married and had two boys.

At a very young age Arie was interested in the smell, taste and feel of everything edible. When it was time to go to school he knew immediately he wanted to be a chef and train at a culinary school. He found his home at none other than the Cordon Bleu in Paris. "French is the mother of all cuisines. I've cooked Greek and Italian, but I always revert back to the classic and simple French cuisine," Arie states.

Arie, Donna Marie and George Pavlou

Arie also teaches at the Suffolk Community College Culinary Institute in Riverhead. He brings an unusual facet to teaching by bringing fresh fish and deer to the students. As a spear fisher and hunter he feels it's important to show them how to clean it, butcher it and prepare it. Making them aware that fish and venison aren't prepackaged, he brings them right from the wilderness of the North Fork.

George Jr. was involved with hotel and restaurant management prior to enlisting in the Armed Forces. After 9/11 he felt it was his duty and after a four year term came back from the Middle East unharmed. Although it was trying for the entire family while he was overseas, to have him return in one piece coupled with George Sr. and Donna Marie's desire after a 35-year marriage and a seven year run in a successful business, they felt it was time to set out on a third honeymoon, and go back to where it all began, Cyprus.

Their restaurant, an elegant, charming 1765 Victorian house where they entertain, host, work and live will now close its doors. The lavender, parsley, thyme, mint, sage, and rosemary herbs planted at the front threshold will be no more. Even though George and Donna Marie will be heading for Mediterranean waters in Cyprus on November 22, Arie with his yellow Corvette and sidekick Leo (his dog) will remain on the North Fork.

Their French cuisine has impressed the palates of many over the last seven years.

Dining there has been called a "gastronomical voyage," attributed to the authentic Parisian trained chef's specialties; Perrigord Foie Gras, Escargot, Frogs Legs, Sweetbreads, Rack of Lamb, Pheasant, Dover Sole, Handmade Chocolate Liquor Truffles and Baked Alaska which all have won outstanding accolades and have been reviewed by the most impressive publications in the dining business including "The Best Of" here at Dan's Papers between 1998-2004. They have also received singing praise from the Zagat Survey 2000-2005, Newsday and The New York Post, Liz Smith 1999, Great Restaurants of Long Island 1999-2002, Newsday 2000, The Washington Post, 2000, Wine Spectator 1999-2005, Sante Magazine 2001-2002 and The International Wine Award Of Excellence.

Chef Arie didn't stop at satisfying the human palate, he also caters to our canine family. He creates "Pooch Biscuits," an all-natural dog food with ingredients that don't have any preservatives or chemicals. His line "Chefs-Best" will be available online, also offering their salad dressing and his incredible edible chocolate truffles. You haven't heard the last of Monsieur Arie, for he will also offer his talents for private cooking parties aptly named, "I Cook For You." If you're having holiday thoughts what's better than a French Chef in your kitchen? You can view the website at www.coeurdessvignes.com or reach Arie directly at 631-766-5298.

And it's not too late to book a farewell dinner or enjoy a sampling from one of North Fork's greats before they close on the 29th. Open Wednesday through Sunday 5 p.m. until the last table leaves, and Saturday opening at noon. They are located in Southold on 57225 Main Rd. and reservations are suggested, please call 631-765-2656.

North Fork Artist of The Week

Art Photographer, Harvey Hellinger

By R.B. Stuart

Harvey Hellinger, art photographer and former president of the Riverhead East End Arts Council, came off a 40-year hiatus to delve once again into his childhood passion of photography.

Hellinger was born and raised in Brooklyn and began his love affair with photography at 14-years-old. "We lived in a two family house and the guy who lived below dabbled in photography. He showed me how to set up a dark room and I fell in love with dark room work. I learned that black and white film doesn't respond to the color red and that's why there is a red light in the darkroom. The camera I used was a 'Voigtlander,' which I still have, and I began with black and white pictures. I really loved it, but at 17 I enlisted and was sent off to WWII and lost the motivation. The dark room disappeared when I went off to war," Hellinger concedes.

Hellinger returned from the war and went to college to become an electrical engineer, thus propelling him into the work force. Then at 54 years old he was, as he says, "Bit all over again," his passion for photography was rekindled. He discovered that while working as a marketing executive in the telecommunications industry which took him on business journeys to the Orient, Middle East, Europe, Mexico and Canada that the photographs he took while traveling would catapult him face first into a dream as a full time art photographer. And after he retired he did just that. With one of his three Nikon 35 mm cameras tucked under his arm, lenses and rolls of film stuffed into his pockets, he ventured with his wife Barbara into the exotic landscapes and cultures his eye craved. Capturing the emotional essence of a scene, "I love having the ability to see something and capture it by using your own feelings about it. When you see something, and put a rectangle around it and to see it, to shoot it, to process it in the lab, to print it, frame it and then see it on the wall is a very satisfying thing, especially when someone wants to buy it and live with it hanging on their wall, looking at it every day," he admits.

Hellinger's ability to see an image and harness the emotional texture of being there, burning it into film, is the obvious talent of a seasoned pro. From fields in Russia to a snow dripped winter day in his back yard, there is a sense of spirit in the moment. His talents are apparent by the nine photography awards he's won over the last 15 years; a Leonard Victor Medal from the Photographic Federation of Long Island, the Napoli Award from the Salamagundi Club in New York City and the Grand Prize from the Bellport Lane Art Gallery.

Hellinger and his wife moved to Riverhead from the South Shore 20 years ago.

In the short 15-year time frame as a professional photographer he has had 40 private exhibitions across Long Island, showing at the Shelter Rock Gallery in Manhasset, the Unitarian Universalist Gallery in Huntington, the Blue Door Gallery in

This self-taught photographer has had his challenges. "Nothing happens until you've seen something. The struggle is to force yourself to look and narrow it down. Finding a subject that interests you and pulls you into the picture. There is a challenge in dealing with light; you either have to be knowledgeable, experienced or lucky enough to know how to deal with it. It's the most basic thing, but is a photographer's biggest problem," Hellinger states.

"Whether you have a camera or not, you're taking pictures. You're mentally framing things. A scene that talks to you, that has emotion in it. It is the thing that attracts you. The biggest thing is a strong subject that says something," he shares.

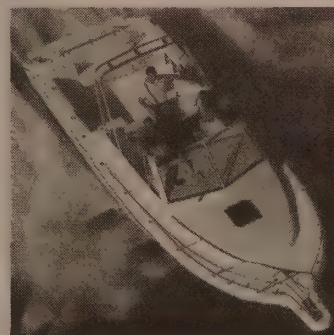

Hellinger speaks Spanish, is a folk musician, loves singing and is a self-taught guitarist. His favorite color work is by three nature photographers; Art Wolf, Ernst Haas and Joel Meyrowitz. He concludes, "Time doesn't hang heavy on our hands, we're constantly in motion."

Hellinger's rich photographic work can be seen and purchased at Vineyard 48 on Rt. 48 in Cutchogue opening Wednesday, November 2nd with an artists reception on Sunday, November 6th. Also, he has shows four to five times a year in New York City on Fifth Ave. at the Salamagundi Club. You can see his work online at www.OnSiteArt.com

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

The colors of autumn give way to the magnificent multi-colored hues of purples, reds, striated greens, yellows, oranges – the vegetables of fall – such as eggplants, turnips, sweet bell pepper, beets, zucchini, and squash. Most significant are winter squashes in their infinite variety of larger, more mature, hard-shell varieties which allow them to be stored and kept over the winter. There's acorn, carnival and buttercup, sweet dumpling, buttercup and Hubbard, delicata, and so many more – and there are varieties within the buttercup category such as the Japanese kabocha.

So what to cook with? Some of the more familiar varieties are the wide-ribbed acorn, great to steam with a bit of melted butter, or the globular Hubbard, recommended for pies the finely grained butternut for soups, risottos and gratins and the turban-shaped buttercup with its particularly sweet and rich flavor so perfect for purees.

Buttercup squash puree, one of my favorite winter squash recipes, incorporates ripe banana, half and half and the spices of fall: cinnamon, allspice and nutmeg. What could be bad? I like to roast wedges of butternut squash, drizzled with oil, in a 400 degree oven until tender. Then drizzle with apple cider syrup for a savory and simple side dish. Steamed acorn or sweet dumpling, halved and baked with lime butter, is adapted from Elizabeth Schneider's Uncommon Fruits and Vegetables, A Commonsense Guide (Harper and Row). One suggestion: when working with hard shell winter squashes; place them in the microwave on high for 3-4 minutes, depending on size just to make them easier to cut through.

Here are a couple of baby steps to Thanksgiving:

BUTTERCUP SQUASH PUREE

Fall is the peak season for the exquisite array of multi-hued winter squash. Buttercup squash has a particularly pleasing sweet flavor perfect for purees.

Serves 8-10

1 3 1/4 - 3 1/2 pound buttercup squash
1 ripe banana cut into chunks
2/3 cup half and half
1/8 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/8 teaspoon ground allspice
1/8 teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

1. Cut the squash in half through the circumference with a sharp knife. Scoop out the seeds and fiber and discard. Place the halves, one at a time, in a steamer basket over simmering water and steam in a tightly covered saucepan about 15 minutes until the squash is very tender. Continue with second half and cook until tender.

2. Scrape the flesh from each half and place, with banana chunks, in a food processor fitted with knife blade or through a ricer into a bowl. Yield about 4 cups puree.

3. Heat the cream with seasonings until reduced by half. Cool a bit and whip into the squash puree to thoroughly combine. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Can prepare ahead and refrigerate in a suitable container for several days. When ready to serve, bring to room temperature, transfer to a buttered gratin or shallow baking dish and bake in a preheated 375 oven about 15-20 minutes. Serve hot.

ROASTED BUTTERNUT SQUASH WITH APPLE CIDER REDUCTION

Fresh apple cider from apple orchards and farm stands is reduced to syrup to glaze wedges of roasted squash.

Serves 4-6

1 quart fresh apple cider
3 - 3 1/2 pound butternut squash
2 - 3 tablespoons grapeseed or canola oil
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper

1. Pour apple cider into a saucepan and reduce over medium-high heat to about 1 - to 1 1/2 cups. Any leftover reduction may be prepared up to several weeks ahead and stored in the refrigerator.

Preheat oven to 400 degrees.

2. Cut squash in half lengthwise and scrape out all the seeds. Then cut the halves into narrow wedges. Toss the squash in a bowl with oil to coat and transfer to a shallow roasting pan, one layer deep. Season with salt and pepper and roast for 45-minutes to 1 hour until squash is tender when pierced with a knife. Serve warm or at room temperature drizzled with cider syrup.

STEAMED WINTER SQUASH WITH LIME BUTTER

Wedges of acorn or sweet dumpling squash are served in a piquant dressing.

Serves 4-6

2 acorn squash or sweet dumpling squash wiped clean

2 1/2 tablespoons unsalted butter
2 teaspoons lime juice
1/4 teaspoon sugar
Dash cayenne pepper to taste

1. Cut the squash lengthwise, slicing slightly off center to avoid touch "poles". With vegetable peeler remove the skin as well as possible. Halve each piece again to make lengthwise quarters.

2. Arrange pieces on a steamer rack over boiling water, skin side up. Cover pan tightly and steam until tender, about 15 minutes.

3. Meanwhile melt butter in a small saucepan, stir in lime juice, sugar and cayenne to taste. Serve squash on warm plates; spoon over butter sauce and serve at once.

Adapted from Elizabeth Schneider's Uncommon Fruits & Vegetables, A Commonsense Guide, Harper and Row.

Hurricanes and Po Boys

For those of us who sat glued to our televisions during the horrific events of Hurricane Katrina, the mourning process is quite different from that of the people who were directly affected. My daily life has not changed greatly following this natural disaster, and I am grateful that no one I knew was hurt or killed. So, with the victims in mind, I mourn what I've lost: a city like none other, with a unique cultural identity and arguably the most exciting and tasty cuisine in the world.

I have a list of the top ten meals of my life. The ambience, the company, the food, and the conversations are all factors in making this elite list. On this list is a meal I ate in the French Quarter in New Orleans about three years ago, with my best friend and college roommate. We drank Hurricanes (I know, how ironic) in the afternoon sunshine, and talked about the complexities of our respective families. We watched in awe as a streetcar named Desire actually rolled past and, recalling the poignancy of Tennessee Williams, we basked in the glories of New Orleans. We ate barbecued shrimp and blackened redfish and praised the fusion of worlds that created Cajun food.

Cajun actually describes people of French Canadian ancestry who ended up living along the bayous of Louisiana. "Cajun" is a shortened version of the word "Acadian," describing the people who lived in the French colony of Acadia, which is now Nova Scotia. The British won the colony from the French in 1713, and when many French settlers refused to pledge loyalty to the British crown, they were forced to leave. In 1755, families were forced from their homes in what was called Le Grand Derangement. More than half of the Acadians lost their lives during this horrific time, and the survivors were scattered across the East Coast. In 1784, the King of Spain allowed these now-unsettled settlers to relocate to the south of Louisiana, where their culture developed. Their cuisine was formed by their methods - fishing and trapping - and acquired a distinctly spicy flavor.

There is a difference between Creole and Cajun food, though both are decidedly New Orleans. Cajun food has a more earthy flavor, straight from the fisherman's trap along the bayous. Creole food is more refined, city food, and has Caribbean characteristics because of the influence of the islands on the city of New Orleans.

So if you're looking to celebrate New Orleans in your own way, whip up a Creole or Cajun concoction. The cuisine there is a major aspect of the culture that can never be washed away. Once you taste the piquant bite of a Shrimp Po Boy, you'll never forget it, or the city that brought it to you.

Shrimp Po Boy

Ingredients:

- 1 to 1 1/2 lbs boiled shrimp
- 2 cups milk
- 1 egg
- Flour
- Cornmeal
- Pinch salt
- Dash pepper
- 6 sub rolls, split
- 1 tomato, sliced
- Lettuce leaves
- Mayonnaise

PREPARATION:

Mix milk with egg; add shrimp and let stand for 3 minutes. Mix equal parts of flour and cornmeal or bread crumbs with salt and pepper. Coat shrimp well with mixture. Cook shrimp at 375° until golden brown. Drain on paper towels. Spread split rolls with mayonnaise. Arrange shrimp on rolls; top with tomato slices and lettuce. Serves 6.

If you'd rather raise a glass to toast a great city that will rise again, then mix up a Hurricane, the official drink of New Orleans. When I ordered them in the French Quarter, they came in hurricane glasses, which are tall, elegantly cut glasses named after the hurricane lamps they mimic. Most New Orleans experts will recommend that this beverage be enjoyed through a straw - but be careful. Just like the storms themselves, they'll creep up on you.

Hurricane Drink

- 1/2 cup ice
- 2 ounces light rum
- 2 ounces passion fruit syrup
- 1 cup lemon-lime soda
- 1 ounce lime juice
- 1 ounce rum

Directions:

In a shaker, combine all ingredients except for regular rum. Shake well and pour into Hurricane glass. Float regular rum on top.

There is much to be done in the Hurricane Relief Effort. One small thing we can all do to revive New Orleans is to remember the unique culture that gave the city its special identity. And that identity is definitely entangled in its Cajun and Creole cuisines.

When In Manhattan... BY OLIVER PETERSON

Slavery in New York

With everything that's fun and interesting and culturally enlightening in the city, sometimes an event will come along that not only educates, but moves us to consider greater issues. I'm a white, straight, Christian male, and I can comfortably assert that I look at all people equally. I also make fun of people equally, but I credit that to my being unable to resist an opening for a good, sharp jab — at whomever it's aimed. Recent images from New Orleans and the devastation caused by Hurricane Katrina have brought issues of race to all of our attention in a way America hasn't felt since Rodney King or the O.J. Simpson trial. The pictures of black families displaced from their homes with neither food nor water or the simple pleasure of a clean bathroom; the biased coverage of white people "finding food" and black people "looting" in the exact same situations; and the government's sluggish response, is hard to ignore. Yes, I'm a bit Liberal, but I'm not nor have I ever been a bleeding heart. Affirmative Action has always been one of those on-the-fence issues for me, acquitting O.J. for "race card" reasons was a farce and in my idealistic mind, I've believed that black Americans have all the same opportunities as white Americans. After Katrina, I can't help but question my ignorance. What would the outcome of a category 5 have been on the East End? Would aid be delayed? I doubt it.

Here in Blue State America — in New York — we'd like to believe we are far beyond the dark, shameful history of segregation and bigotry with which our country began. We'd like to look down to the southern states and think we are somehow above the treachery they fought to uphold. On October

"Ceasar, A Slave," 1851, Photographer Unknown

7th, the New-York Historical Society opened their brave new exhibition: Slavery in New York. It will cover 9,000 square feet through 10 galleries.

Two major exhibitions, public programs, walking tours, educational materials and programs for school, college, and adult learners will examine the integral role that the slave trade, and the economy and societies it created in the 19th century, played in making New York the wealthiest city in the world. New York's deep connection to African enslavement is a story virtually unknown to the public. The show will span the some 200 years slavery was practiced in New York, from the 1620s to July 5, 1827 when black slaves were emancipated in the state. Many questions will be asked and much controversy created by the revelations in this show.

Louise Mirrer, New-York Historical Society (NYHS) president, was quoted in the Houston Chronicle as saying that because the topic "is difficult and sensitive, we must be impeccable historically." So expect no fact to be unchecked. Information has been culled from original documents (on display) in the library and museum collection of the NYHS, the New York State Library in Albany, the Municipal Archives, and the Gilder Lehrman Collection. The archeological finds from an African Burial Ground discovered in Lower Manhattan are also highlighted. They are part of over 400 artifacts, paintings, documents and maps on display. Be prepared to be struck by facts never before presented, and many stories of human drama like the plight of Deborah Squash, a 20-year-old slave who escaped servitude under George Washington to find freedom behind British lines. Late next year, the sequel exhibition "Commerce and Conscience" will cover the post-Civil War years and complete the $5 million project.

Anyone who wants to understand where they've come from, black or white, should see this show. Knowledge is the first step in uniting us as a people and leaving our past behind. Sometimes it feels like things are moving so well in the right direction, but the reality is, we have work to do. New Yorkers and Americans will do themselves a disservice by missing this one.

EAST END KID: COME TO CMEE

by Emily Hart Post

With a little Help from Katlean de Monchy and David Post

COME TO CMEE

It finally happened. The big Opening Day of the Children's Museum of the East End in Bridgehampton was Saturday October 8. Right on schedule. There was a big party and some speeches and some cool Gospel singing, then the museum opened and the kids all rushed in. There were color-coded paths for people and kids to take, but once they were in the museum they went to the spots they liked best. Even a ten-foot man couldn't stop the rush of enthusiasm. I had a great time. I started going through the tunnel when you first get in (kids only). Then I tried many of the wonderful stops along the way. I loved fishing for magnetic fish and caught a few. I drove the fire truck, I played at the farm stand, I tried everything, I think. I also saw the special box that my half-sister Randee Daddona and I made for the museum, that was about the North Fork and Dan's Papers, along with all the other boxes made by kids and their parents. It was a terrific day and I told Mom and Dad that I want to go back so they joined as members. It is a place to go to over and over again. I was lucky to see it when it was being built so I appreciated it even more as a finished product.

That Decor is for Babies

"WWaahhh." The sounds of your crying baby echo in your ear. You roll over and check the digital clock with bleary eyes and process that fact that it is indeed 3 a.m. Peering into the video monitor you see that your little one is rubbing his eyes, rolling over and attempting to pull himself up on the crib railing. Time to get up and make that bottle! It's been 3 hours since the last feeding and your baby is hungry.

Cuddling your baby in your arms, you gently feed him his bottle. As he hungrily eats, you rock him back and forth in your glider, humming softly in the little one's ear, trying to get him back into a deep sleep. Glancing around the nursery, you take it all in and appreciate all the hard work and time that went into creating it. This beautiful little room is serene and peaceful, just perfect for this new little life in your arms.

Creating a nursery can be so overwhelming! I love www.nurserydepot.com It's a wholesale distributor of name brand baby bedding. When my husband and I adopted our son from Korea, he arrived home when he was six months old. I had way too much time on my hands to price around, shop and decorate. We waited for 5 long months for the red tape to clear and for him to arrive home after we saw his first picture. Nursery Depot was terrific. I spoke to the representative and described what I wanted. I love animals and wanted a room that could grow with our son. They guided me toward the Paradiso by Kidslines under the "Animals and Nature" theme.

It was love at first sight. The soft green and blue pastel fabric was set off by bright orange giraffes, green turtles and blue leopards. The picture on the website showed everything that you would need for the nursery. What I loved was that it showed that a light wood crib in natural would look best. So in addition to ordering the complete set which included: blanket, sheets, valance for the window, bumper for the crib and mobile, I also ordered the matching border, rug, wall hanging, and diaper stacker and ran to my local baby store and ordered the crib. We choose one that turns into a toddler bed, figuring that it would grow with our child.

Once I had my theme and my bedding, the rest was easy. I walked into Babies R Us armed with a huge shopping basket and a pocketbook full of cash. There was no stopping me and thankfully my husband didn't even try. He just groaned as I asked him to carry box after box up to the nursery. We went with a changing table that matched the natural light wood of our crib, a soft mattress to go on top of that and soft fleece covers in matching light blue to cover the mattress.

We selected a video monitor so we could clearly see our son from our bedroom and a humidifier to keep in his room for those nights when he'd have the sniffles. Inexperienced as we were, we knew that babies sometimes have little accidents. With this in mind we purchased waterproof sheet protectors and two extra sets of sheets. Knowing that babies like to hear the sound of their mother's heartbeat we bought a light which was voice sensitive and would go off with a soft heartbeat sound whenever the baby cried. My favorite purchase was the Ocean Wonders Aquarium. The soft music, low lights and gently swimming fish turned out to be a favorite with our son and would often entrance him into a deep sleep. He's now 22 months and still loves it.

There were nights when music was the only thing that could get him to stop crying. I am so grateful to Beethoven and Bach for getting me some sleep. Classical music works like a charm and the crib CD players are available with a turn off feature and most are noise sensitive. Once the baby is safely asleep, the music will stop, but until then your child will be calmed down and lulled by soft music.

Bringing home a baby is a very special event and designing the nursery doesn't have to be overwhelming. Search online or go to the store and ask the experts, then have fun preparing for the new arrival.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

The shops are still busy with tourists and shoppers. Believe it or not, the weather has been a plus.....so let's do what we do best.....let's shop!

The Mill at Westhampton, located at 175 Montauk Highway in Remsenburg, is having a "Liquidation Sale" and every thing must go. This is the final week to save on furniture, chandeliers and home accessories. The Mill at Bridgehampton is also having a sale with 20% to 50% off selected merchandise. Now is the time to spruce up your home for the holidays, and save on home furnishings.

Pumpkin pickin' time at Hildreth's Department Stores, Main Street Southampton.....Look for pumpkin spice quick bread mix by Stonewall. The gift set sells for $22.95, including the spatula, mix and a jar of pumpkin butter. How about the set of three ivory and gold ceramic leaf pattern mixing bowls for $24.95? Or fall/floral wreaths at $46.95, and Vera Bradley eyeglass cases, wallets, cosmetic cases, handbags, totes and duffel bags in new fall patterns and assorted micro fiber colors starting at $8? Look for Taylor linens, new Berkshire quilts from twin to king that start at $189.95, Little Giraffe chenille microfiber robes in all sizes and colors for those cold winter nights for $98 and so much more.

Southampton's Sunrise To Sunset, The Beach and Lifestyle Store on Hill Street is having a sale with 10% off all new back to school clothing for young men, boys and girls. Names like Quiksilver, Hurley, Lost, Roxy, Billabong, Split are available here. And.....if you are looking for backpacks, there are hundreds of them to choose from.

At English Country Antiques, on Snake Hollow Road in Bridgehampton and North Sea Road in Southampton, you will love the sale on select merchandise that is happening right now. It's worth the trip!

Here's a sale I have been waiting for! At Fishers Home Furnishings on Main Street in Sag Harbor, you will find their "Annual Fall Sale" which will save you 20% to 50% off storewide. There is so much going on here, look for great deals on armchairs, sofas, tables, linens, occasional furniture and home accessories. The sale ends on Sunday, October 16. Bet you don't walk out empty handed.

Sag Harbor's famous Emporium True Value on Main Street is having a great sale on fall merchandise to clean up the yard, feed the birds, paint the kitchen. You name it, they have it. The sale ends October 23, so get going while the savings last.

Nearby at D.J. Hart on Main Street in Sag Harbor you will find the shop overloaded with sweaters and velvets and while you're there, look for the vast assortment of vintage beads just in time for the holidays. This shop has a little bit of everything including hats, scarves, bags, jewelry, unique ladies clothing and accessories. Stop in and check this one out!

Montauk's Haven Home and lifestyle store is having an "Annual Fall Sale" that will keep you going back for more! There is a great selection of gift items for the home, and clothing and furnishings that are 30% to 50% off. There is also a great new selection of vintage furnishings, antiques and bamboo furniture. You will love the shabby chic upholstery and furnishings, one-of-a-kind funky lamps, chandeliers, mirrors, picture frames, tableware, clocks, handmade blankets, linens and more. Get an early start and get a jump on shopping for your holiday stuffers and gifts. Call Haven Home at 631-668-4844.

On the North Fork: Gallery M, 308A Main Street in Greenport (www.gallerym.biz) has very unusual art to wear such as jewelry, handbags, jackets made of wool and silk along with scarves and everyday items. Just arrived here are hot new jackets with silk applique trim to wear for every occasion, unique pieces of jewelry from wonderful creative artists that will complement any style and wonderful gifts for everyone for the upcoming holidays. The gallery represents over 200 artists from the US and Canada that produce distinctive contemporary crafts of very high quality. The pieces are signed by the artists, and range from ceramics/pottery, glass, metal, wood and fiber to paintings and sculpture. This is a must-stop-shop and the ferry ride this time of year is delightful!

Time is flying by, I'm getting ready to plan my next week's shopping trip.

Until next week, ciao and happy fall shopping.

If you have any questions or comments, or your shop is having a sale, I would love to know about it. E-mail me at Shoptil@danspapers.com or by fax at: 631-537-6755.

Dan's Papers Peeled

In anticipation of the Hamptons International Film Festival, running from Oct. 19-23, we took a gander at what this year has to offer and figured we'd give you a little sneak peek.

Frozen Land World Cinema East Coast Premiere

Thu 10/20 8:30 p.m.-UA EH, Sun 10/23 2 p.m. - Montauk

This Finnish film, set in the bleak Helsinki winter, is a film where everyone and everything is interconnected. This a dark tale, dealing with every social ill imaginable: poverty, rape, murder, drug abuse, alcoholism, theft, and depression. It's a lot to cover in 130 minutes and although most of the character plots are tied in quite nicely, there are some loose ends.

The majority of the film is shot at night and even the day scenes carry a twilight hue as if darkness is just about to set in. The plot follows a chain reaction starting at the firing of a teacher to make way for a new one and ending five years later when his son becomes a teacher. Within that time all hell breaks loose for everyone involved. —JC

Highway Courtesans World Cinema, NY Premiere

Fri 21 Oct, 11 a.m. - UA EH

The din of highway traffic runs throughout this documentary. The noise is dull and repetitive at first, but by the end it is chilling. The courtesans of the title are girls from a village of prostitutes in rural India, who come from a centuries-old tradition of palace courtesans, but now work the roadside at the edge of their homes, servicing the truckers who pass through. The filmmaker focuses on one girl, Guddi, and follows her over the course of nine years as she struggles with the pressures of her family and the weight of tradition in an attempt to break free of the life she has been forced into. —JC

Muskrat Lovely Golden Starfish Award Documentary, World Premiere

Thu 10/20, 6 p.m.-UA EH, Fri 10/21, 12 p.m.-UA EH

Who says that beauty pageants and skinning rodents don't mix? Some might say they are a perfect combination. A lighthearted account of the fiftieth annual Miss Outdoors Beauty Pageant in Dorchester, Maryland, Muskrat Lovely is just such a combination. The documentary doesn't choose to focus on any principal participants, but rather traces the character of the place.

With taped body parts, fake boobs, flared tempers and Vaseline smiles pageants may not be for the squeamish, but this pageant is heartwarming when contrasted with the animal skinning contest which follows. And the graphic scenes of pelt removal are nearly as disturbing as the pageant's opening dance number. The film finds humor in the event, but never descends to its participants. In the end, it is a chronicle of the weirdness that a typical American town is capable of. —JC

Sisters in Law, Films of Conflict and Resolution Competition, US Premiere

Fri 10/21, 5 p.m.-UA EH, Sun 10/23, 1:30 p.m.-Sag Harbor

Shot over a three-month period in Kumba, Cameroon, this documentary follows the life of females in the local judicial system. Prosecutor Vera Ngassa and Justice Beatrice Ntuba are women making a difference in the small town of Kumba. Acclaimed documentarist Kim Longinotto and co-director Florence Ayisi (a native of Kumba) not only capture the roles these women have in Cameroon, but the changing role of all women in the country. It follows three cases dealing with women in situations of abuse; spousal abuse, rape, and child abuse (although some of these lines overlap). Although the topics are difficult ones, the film shows no mercy as it captures the prosecution, judging and sentencing of these

offenders. —CM

Sweet Land, Golden Star Fish Narrative, World Premiere
Fri 10/21 6:30 p.m. - UA EH, Sat 10/22 12 p.m.-UA EH

Director and screenwriter Ali Selim had love in mind when she came up with the idea to shoot a movie set at the end of the World War I era. Her directorial feature debut, Sweet Land, is appropriately named as stunning shots of gorgeous Minnesota farm landscape sweep the screen.

The movie portrays the physical and cultural struggles immigrants endure when coming to America, and also shows the nastiness of unwelcoming citizens. The main character, Inge (Elizabeth Reaser), finds herself in an emotional bind as she tries to fit into the American way of life and have the community around her accept her marriage to recent Norwegian immigrant Olaf (Tim Guinee). —DLR

Who Gets to Call it Art? World Cinema, World Premiere
Thu 10/20, 5 p.m.-Guild Hall, Sat 10/22, 3:30 p.m.-Sag Harbor

Noted director Peter Rosen, who has made films on renowned artists and performers such as Stephen Sondheim, I.M. Pei and Placido Domingo, brings focus on another one of America's great art icons, the late Henry Geldzahler. The sometimes controversial curator of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Geldzahler is known for influencing the then current state and future of contemporary art. His exhibition New York Painting and Sculpture 1940-1970 brought an awareness of the undercurrents of pop culture that is seldom seen today. Rosen's film features testimonials by some of the creative minds that worked with him. Painters and artists like Frank Stella, Larry Poons, and James Rosenquist explore the larger-than-life character that is Henry Geldzahler. —CM

Champagne reception following Saturday's show from 5-8 p.m. at The Gallery, 125 Main Street, Sag Harbor. 725-7077

Zero Degrees Of Separation, World Cinema, US Premiere

Sat 10/22, 3:30 p.m.-UA EH, Sun 10/23, 4 p.m.-UA EH

Sometimes people get caught up in strange and tough situations. Sometimes they are so strange and so tough that a movie simply has to be made about those people. That is exactly the thinking that Elle Flanders had when he decided to follow the lives of two gay lovers, Selim and Ezra, who are caught in the middle of the Palestinian and Israeli conflict. Selim is Palestinian and Ezra is Israeli. They live in Jerusalem, where Selim is considered illegal and constantly lives under the threat of being arrested and jailed. The director shows in interesting footage the tough realities of Palestinian and Israeli conflict and also how deep the conflict rests in the parents and in the grandparents of the main characters. —DLR

The Cave of the Yellow Dog, Golden Starfish Competition, US Premiere

Thu 10/20, 5p.m.-UA EH, Fri 10/21, 7p.m.-Sag Harbor, Sat 10/22, 1 p.m.-Montauk

Byambasuren Davaa's film depicts a nomadic herding family in the steppes of Mongolian grasslands. This film's pace is true to its world and the story is simple, and demands a viewer's patience. The entire plot revolves around a small girl's love of her dog and the disapproval of her father.

Davaa's succeeds through her earnest depiction and intimacy with subject matter. Her incorruptible eye avoids sentimentality and the quiet, unspectacular images give us the feeling that we are bearing witness to a world so still it might have gone unnoticed. We are aware of the modern world through mention although it is rarely visible. Still industry encroaches through the arrival of the plastic spoon, the puttering motorcycle and finally the senseless political speeches delivered through loudspeakers. The last shot shows us a train coming towards the audience, passing our huddled family by. —JN

Entertainment In The Hamptons

Take Five 2005 with Jan Silver

This weekend comedian Steve Solomon does a show in Westhampton Beach, Opera of the Hamptons performs in Hampton Bays, a new play is onstage at Guild Hall, and a triple bill of movie classics are screened at Sag Harbor's Bay Street Theatre. Country/folksinger Jimmie Dale Gilmore is at Amagansett's Stephen Talkhouse on Saturday, and jazz pianist George Cables with trombonist/seashell jazzman Steve Turre are this weekend's performers in the Estia Cantina Jazz Fiesta.

Everyone's invited to the party celebrating the restored Sag Harbor neon sign over the Main St. cinema on October 13 at 5:30 p.m. The notable French film Look at Me is at Southampton's Parrish Art Museum tonight, and classical pianist Ren Zhang gives a concert Sunday afternoon in Southampton. There are several interesting speakers here this week including 1950s/60s movie star Tab Hunter talking about his life in Hollywood at BookHampton, East Hampton on Saturday afternoon.

The Hamptons International Film Festival opens next Wednesday and runs through Sunday, October 23, with screenings in East Hampton, Southampton, Sag Harbor and Montauk. Tickets for the feature films, documentaries, student films, children's films and shorts plus panel discussions, parties and other special events, are now on sale at two locations: 126 North Main Street, East Hampton, and Southampton Inn, 91 Hill Street, Southampton. The listings, schedule and tickets are also online at www.hamptonsfilmfest.org and tickets and passes can be purchased by calling 1-866-HIFF-TIX.

THEATER

Comedian Steve Solomon brings his popular series of family sketches, My Mother's Italian, My Father's Jewish and I'm in Therapy, to the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center on Saturday at 8 p.m. Tickets ($30-50) are available at the door or by calling the PAC box office after noon at 631-288-1500.

A new theater company, Point Theatre, is presenting Jake Oliver's new play Some Story!, seven short comedic tales for grownups, at the John Drew Theater, Guild Hall, East Hampton this Friday and Saturday, 8 p.m., and Sunday at 2 p.m. Mr. Oliver and company met while working at Hamptons Shakespeare Festival. Tickets are $18 adults, $15 for seniors and students at the door.

Naked Stage, a group of local theater professionals, resume reading and discussing new and classic plays next Tuesday, October 18, at the John Drew Theater, East Hampton, 7:30 p.m. There is no admission charge.

MUSIC

Opera of the Hamptons is performing a "Harvest Moon Gala" of operatic and Broadway favorites at Hampton Bays High School on Saturday at 7 p.m. This is a benefit to restore the 1830 King house on Montauk Highway (known as "Ada's Attic") for the Hampton Bays Historical Society. Tickets are $45 in advance (call the Historical Society at 631-728-0887) or $55 at the door.

Classical pianist Ren Zhang will play works by Schumann, Ravel and Rachmaninoff in a concert sponsored by Friends of the Rogers Memorial Library at the Southampton library on Sunday, 3 p.m. There is no admission charge but seating is limited, so please call the library at 631-283-0774 for reservations.

Performers at local clubs and restaurants:

FILMS

The Picture Show at Bay Street Theatre, Sag Harbor, is showing three classics this weekend. Judy Garland and James Mason star in the dramatic A Star Is Born tonight, and Garland in the musical Meet Me In St. Louis on Saturday evening — both showings start at 8 p.m. On Sunday, Audrey Hepburn and George Peppard star in the romantic comedy Breakfast at Tiffany's to be screened at 1 p.m. There is a 6 p.m. Fri. & Sat. $24.95 dinner-and-movie package at the American Hotel (11 a.m. brunch-and-movie on Sunday) — call the restaurant at 631-725-3535 for reservations. Admission to the film only is $5 at the door.

Agnes Jaoui's tender 2004 film Look At Me, about a 20-year-old Parisian woman's life, is tonight's "Friday Night at the Movies" feature at the Parrish Art Museum, Southampton, 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $5 for Museum members, $8 for guests, and refreshments are served.

British director Stephen Frears' acclaimed 2004 movie Dirty Pretty Things, starring Audrey Tatou, will be shown at Southampton's Rogers Memorial Library next Thursday, October 20, at 3 p.m. There is no admission charge.

SPEAKERS

1950s/60s movie star Tab Hunter (Battle Cry, Damn Yankees and many more), now a film producer, will talk about his new memoir Tab Hunter Confidential at BookHampton, East Hampton, on Saturday, 1 p.m. The book tells what it was like to be gay but studio-packaged as a heterosexual star during those years, and how hard it was to get work after the studio era. Admission to this talk is free.

Actress/director Toni Munna will read from an early 1800s Southampton woman's diary at the Southampton Historical Museum, 17 Meetinghouse Lane, next Wednesday at 7 p.m. There is no admission charge but call 631-283-2494 to reserve a seat.

Dracula expert Garrison Lutz will talk about Transylvania's most famous son next Thurs., Oct. 20, at the East Hampton Library, 5:30 p.m. The lecture is free but reservations are requested; call 631-324-0222.

Dave Evans' MINI - MOVIE REVIEWS

The Greatest Game Ever Played
writing contests in order to support her family while the ever-solid Woody Harrelson stars as her volatile and depressed husband.

Serenity

The weird and wonderful world of Joss Whedon, the creator of Buffy The Vampire Slayer, returns to the big screen in this movie adaptation of his cancelled show, Firefly. Sci-fi fans have been raving ever since it came off the air but this satisfies in all the right ways: the cast are young and pretty, the jokes come thick and fast and the plot veritably crackles along. A sequel seems assured.

In Her Shoes

In this adaptation of Good in Bed, author Jennifer Weiner's chick-lit novel, party-loving Maggie (Cameron Diaz) clashes with her frumpy sister Rose (Toni Collette) and the two come to know their long-lost grandmother Ella (Shirley MacLaine). This is far less terrible than it sounds and while light, fluffy and sit-commy in all the right ways, excellent turns from all three actresses makes this a cut above the date-movie formula.

Two for the Money

Matthew McConaughey stars as a college football player who falls back on his ability to predict the outcome of games when he is injured on the field. Al Pacino steps in to exploit said talent and take McConaughey to the top. But of course, the gift falters, the relationship sours and so on and so forth. Dull, drab and predictable, this serves mostly as another milestone in the fall of Pacino. More Gigli than Godfather.

Waiting...

In the style of Clerks, writer-director Rob McKittrick's debut feature follows a day in the lives of the waitstaff at Shenanigan's Restaurant. The cast is mostly up-and-coming Young Hollywood (Brokeback Mountain's Anna Farris for instance) but it is Luis Guzman who steals the show here, proving himself one of the great character actors of current American cinema. Though indulgent, this is a solidly enjoyable adult comedy.

Wallace & Gromit: The Curse of the Were-Rabbit

Animator Nick Park's brings back the cheese-loving Wallace and his long-suffering dog Gromit in this sequel to the much-loved The Wrong Trousers. Though it can be twee and irritating in all the ways that British comedy can be, this never distracts from the ingenuity of the plot or the beauty of the animation itself. The least painful way to take the kids to the cinema since Shrek.

review: a naked girl on the appian way...by gordin & christiano

When the curtain rises at the premiere of Richard Greenberg's new comedy A Naked Girl on the Appian Way, John Lee Beatty's set will absolutely wow you. He has created a fabulous multilevel replica of the quintessential Hampton home. The house, boasting a grand staircase, is light and airy with sparkling surfaces. The Hamptons great room is flooded with sunlight from windows on top of windows, which look out onto lushly manicured grounds. The anticipation of Doug Hughes (Tony Award winner for Doubt) directing Mr. Greenberg's latest work flows into overdrive with high expectations. What follows, however, is not nearly as exciting as Mr. Beatty's set design.

Richard Greenberg is one of the theatre's most confident and prolific playwrights. His plays are consistently clever, boasting intellectually witty dialogue with a sophistication that has few rivals. He is skilled at giving us imaginative situations, which at their best can be dazzling, thought-provoking displays of craftsmanship. His Tony Award winning play, Take Me Out, about the ramifications of a gay baseball player's emergence from the closet is Mr. Greenberg at his best. Last season, his play The Violet Hour possessed an ingenious concept about a mysterious machine that began spewing out pages from books of the future, but didn't quite add up.

A Naked Girl on the Appian Way, although entertainingly adroit, falls into the latter category. I did find a lot of the evening very funny, indeed, but in an artificial kind of way, more like a sophisticated sitcom. What's missing here for the most part is real emotional truth.

The plot concerns two middle-aged parents, Bess and Jeffrey Lapin, a miscast Jill Clayburgh and an equally miscast Richard Thomas. She is a successful cookbook author. He is an intellectual theorist who writes about money. As the play opens, they are expecting Juliet (Susan Kelechi Watson) and Thad (Matthew Morrison), two of their three adopted children, who are returning from a 17-month excursion in Europe.

Bess is in the kitchen cooking and Jeff is searching for his misplaced notes. Immediately you realize something is wrong with this scene. They are not playing their actions. He is not really searching for his notes and she is not really preparing the food. Instead, they are talking at and to each other. This is not the familiarity of a couple, who have known one another for almost 30 years, engrossed in their tasks. This is actors working hard at trying to appear real.

This is precisely what is wrong with most of the evening. The action of the play is contrived. The characters are only occasionally grounded in an emotional truth that is actually believable. Considering Mr. Greenberg's past accomplishments, it is rather startling.

When the adopted siblings, Juliet, a brainy girl from the Dominican Republic, and Thad, an athletic dimwitted blond hunk, arrive; we soon learn that their love for one another has become carnal and they plan to wed. Oh my gosh! Bess and Jeff believe this must be incest. Where have they gone wrong? Have their children become the mirror image of their liberal thinking?

Bill (James Yaegashi), their, bisexual Asian child, may be the best realized character. He is beside himself with despair. He has been rejected twice and there is, no consoling him. He is convinced no one cares for him and that he has always been the least favorite.

Matthew Morrison and Susan Kelechi Watson

In addition, there are two irrelevant characters to keep the one-liners flying and to stun us with surprises. There is the elderly Sadie (Ann Gilbert), an angry foul-mouthed nextdoor neighbor, who is outrageously funny with her one-line zingers and who is less effective as her shallow daughter-in-law.

As the two adopted sons, Matthew Morrison and James Yaegashi are outstanding. Mr. Morrison grounds his character in an unflappable optimism that is charming to witness. He bounds about the set with an athleticism that is the physical component to his character's emotional life. Mr. Yaegashi is his antithesis in his unyielding poutiness. The two are delightful together, sharing some of the evening's best-realized moments.

The play is beautifully produced, but the strain shows and nothing lives up to Mr. Beatty's outstanding set design. I can't help imagining what might have been.

A Naked Girl on the Appian Way is now playing on Broadway at the American Airline Theatre, 227 West 42nd Street. For tickets call 212-719-1300, online at www.roundabouttheater.org or at the box office.

Ada's Attic or The King House – What's in a Name?

There are many communities across the country and certainly on Long Island that now look back and bemoan their lack of foresight when they demolished old historic houses that were such an important part of this country's still young history. So, full marks to the civic-minded people in Hampton Bays who have come together to ensure that The King House is spared for future generations to enjoy.

Barbara Moeller, President of the Historical Society, has been responsible for much of the extensive research on the King House, which was built back in about 1830 to the design specifications of a prominent businessman, Prosper King, who ended up having two wives and a total of fifteen children! The house is located on Montauk Highway in Hampton Bays and stayed in the King family for many years, eventually becoming King's Antique Store. In 1968, it became Ada's Attic (named after a collecting friend of the new owners). When the owners decided they wished to sell, the Historical Society negotiated with the Town of Southampton to purchase the property which allowed the Historical Society to become the tenant. After restoration the house will become the headquarters of the Historical Society and a Cultural and Educational Center for Hampton Bays.

Restoration always costs a lot of money, so Hampton Bays Rotary Club decided to stage a fundraiser starring artists of Opera of the Hamptons in a Harvest Moon Gala, which is to be held on Saturday October 15th, with dinner at Villa Paul followed by the performance at Hampton Bays High School. Dinner will be at 5 p.m. and the concert starts at 7 p.m. Apart from the Rotary Club, other civic organizations playing major roles in this event are the Historical and Preservation Society, the Beautification Organization, the Civic Association and the Chamber of Commerce.

Eileen Grogan is the President of the Rotary Club and she explained, "This is the first historical building to be restored in Hampton Bays and we have been delighted by the level of support from all of these community associations, who have joined together in an effort to enhance still further the community in which we live and work."

The program for the gala promises a wonderful evening of melodies from the operatic repertoire and from the scores of some of the best-loved Broadway shows. No doubt many in the audience will have been at the company's recent production La Boheme where David Katz as Rodolfo and Maria Ciccaglione in the role of Mimi played out their tragic love affair with such realism that there were few dry eyes in the audience by the end. The international group of artists that has been brought together for this event by Barbara Giancola, the Artistic Director of the company, and Atarah Hazzan, the Music Director, include Beverley Vanessa Hill, Barbara Heller, Christian Sebek and Ross Benoliel.

Beverly Vanessa Hill is a dramatic soprano who has been applauded by critics and audiences all over this country and in cities such as Vienna, Salzburg and Berlin. She also has the distinction of being the first American soprano to be asked to sing at the prestigious Chaliapin Festival in Russia. Barbara Heller is well known to regular followers of the company and she most recently sang the role of Flora in La Traviata at the Vail Levitt Theater. Unusual for an opera singer, she also is a very talented stand-up comic and has won selection for the finals at the Improv in New York. Christian Sebek is a tenor who appeared several years ago with the company and recently he sang a major role with the Houston opera and Carnegie Hall as a soloist in the Messiah. Ross Benoliel has sung in Italy and Switzerland and this will be his debut in this country. He is a finalist of the 2004 Metropolitan Opera Regional Competition.

The special guest artist for the evening will be the prominent jazz stylist Nat Jones who has accompanied such greats as Sarah Vaughn and Dinah Washington and performed regularly at venues such as the St. Regis, Waldorf-Astoria and the River Club. The program for the evening will be very varied. If you love classical opera you will hear some of the greatest arias. If you love Broadway or the old time standard songs of masters such as Gershwin and Berlin or if you want to pay a tribute to Christopher Columbus you won't be disappointed. This promises to be an evening full of great music to meet all tastes.

Tickets are available from the Historical Society at 631-728 0887. It is $75 for the dinner and show. The show only is $45 before the day and $55 on the day.

DAN'S WINE GUIDE GOES TO THE DOGS

Since dogs are "man's best friend" it only makes sense that they would have a place – and an important one at that – in many winery operations. By patrolling the vines, they keep the vineyard free of hungry birds and deer. Their friendship can cheer the staff with the wag of a tail. But perhaps most importantly, they serve as canine ambassadors in the tasting room, greeting and entertaining visitors.

Besides, since a sense of smell is a big part of enjoying wine, who better to help sniff out the best?

Merlot, Everyone?

Local Winemakers Form Alliance Around Single Varietal

By Lenn Thompson

In late September, five Long Island wineries – Pellegrini Vineyards (Cutchogue), Raphael (Peconic), Sherwood House Vineyards (Mattituck), Shinn Estate Vineyards (Mattituck) and Wolffer Estate (Sagaponack) – joined forces to create the Long Island Merlot Alliance (LIMA), the first such quality alliance established in our region.

LIMA's goal is to develop quality standards in the production of classically styled Merlot while seeking recognition for Long Island as the leading Merlot appellation in the New World. Membership is open to any Long Island winery with a Farm Winery or Special Farm Winery license, but applicants must display an "explicit commitment to Merlot," which means that 100 percent of the Merlot produced must originate from one of the three official Long Island American Viticultural Areas (Long Island, North Fork, and Hamptons, respectively). The producer must also exhibit a "commitment to environmentally sustainable viticultural practices."

It's hard to argue with any organization that has the goal of improving quality and encouraging less damaging farm practices, but why focus on Merlot?

"The idea of an overall Long Island quality alliance has been tossed around for some time but the concept never went anywhere," said Richard Olsen-Harbich, winemaker and general manager at Raphael. "I think perhaps the philosophies were too diverse and the qualifications of setting quality standards for over a dozen or so varieties too complicated a task to focus on." He feels that the statement "we do everything well" is too watered down to be effective and, "frankly,

Letter From Dan's Wine Guide Editor

In this, our next to last Dan's Wine Guide of the year, we are looking forward to harvest though perhaps clinging a bit to summer. I have yet to fulfill my promise of a report on the First Great Annual Bordeaux-Style Tasting (conducted during our exile to Shelter Island while our Orient house was renovated during the dog days of August), attended by Eric Fry of Lenz and Stan Schumacher of Borghese along with assorted friends passionate about all things vinicultural. This will appear in November's Guide, along with the results of a Riesling tasting now in the works. And speaking of dog days, don't miss the photo-op assembled by Lenn Thompson. Not your average Dan's photo page. On the culinary front, I return again (and again and again) to my favorite country-dining destination. Turn to page 7 for the latest review.

In the meantime, plan a visit to your favorite wineries during harvest, and raise a glass celebrating Long Island wine. Cheers.

OVER THE BARREL...

with Lenn Thompson

Martha Clara Vineyards: A "Glowing" Review

Okay, it's official. Martha Clara Vineyards (and its winemaker, Gilles Martin) have climbed up my ranking of Long Island vineyards. I don't actually have a list from one to thirty-plus, of course, but what was once a winery highlighted by its high-profile events is really starting to win me over with what matters — the juice.

Sure, they still make (and sell) a ton of their white zinfandel-esque rose (isn't the beagle-adorned label cute?) and the Glacier's End line of wines, but a look further down on the tasting sheet reveals wines with nice varietal character that are worth elbowing your way up to their always-packed tasting bar for.

The recently released Martha Clara Vineyards 2004 Riesling ($15) and Martha Clara Vineyards 2004 Gewurztraminer ($16) both sport new label designs that feature deer crossing street signs — deer are indigenous and can actually ravage vineyards if allowed to feast on the grapes. Riesling and Gewurztraminer are probably my two favorite white varietals and these are respectable versions.

The Riesling is extremely pale yellow in the glass and offers faint, but typical floral aromas with apple and faint white peach notes as well. Feathery light in the mouth with flavors of rose petals, peach and minerals, this wine would really shine with a bit more acidity. Without it, this isn't quite the great food wine top Rieslings are.

Lack of acidity plagues the Gewurztraminer a bit as well. Similar in color, the nose doesn't have the pronounced lychee aromas often found in Gewurtz. It's more of a background note behind lemony-citrus, sweet spice and mineral scents. A little residual sugar means that this is an off-dry wine and that sweetness is noticeable because of the slightly underwhelming acidity. This is my least favorite of the new whites.

Local producers are doing some great things with Sauvignon Blanc these days. Martha Clara Vineyards 2004 Sauvignon Blanc ($16) could use a label design upgrade, but it's what's inside the bottle that counts, and in this case it's not half bad. It takes a little extra swirling to coax the faint grapefruit and lemon aromas out of this wine but fresh acidity and citrus flavors make this easily recognizable as Sauvignon Blanc, even if it's a bit neutral in the flavor department.

Far and away my favorite of the whites is the Martha Clara Vineyards 2004 Viognier ($16). Light straw yellow, it offers soft aromas of peach, apricot and ripe pears accented by the faintest hints of nutmeg. The mouthfeel is soft, full bodied and tongue coating, while the flavors range from ripe golden delicious apple to juicy peach. The acidity is subtle and gives way to a fruity, appley finish.

As I often find with Martha Clara wines, no matter how much I enjoy the best whites, it's the red wines that jump out and demand attention and praise. It's no different with Martha Clara Vineyards' 2002 "50" Five-O red table wine ($25). This blend of fifty-percent Merlot, twenty five-percent Cabernet Sauvignon, fifteen-percent cabernet franc and ten-percent Syrah is the "son" of Martha Clara's "6025" Meritage (an Over the Barrel favorite) and it is chewy, juicy and ripe. A deep violet, slightly inky crimson in the glass, its nose suggests ripe raspberries, amaretto and understated vanilla. With good structure, medium body and, lush mouth feel and juicy raspberry jam flavors spiced with oak, the Syrah component, while small, is evident.

Why is it called Five-O? I assumed it was because the blend is 50-percent merlot, but Ben Coutts, marketing manager for Martha Clara, told me "(Martha Clara Vineyard's owner) Mr. Entenmann has gained the nicknamed Five-O around the vineyard" because (he) believes that anyone over fifty (he's 78) knows it all."

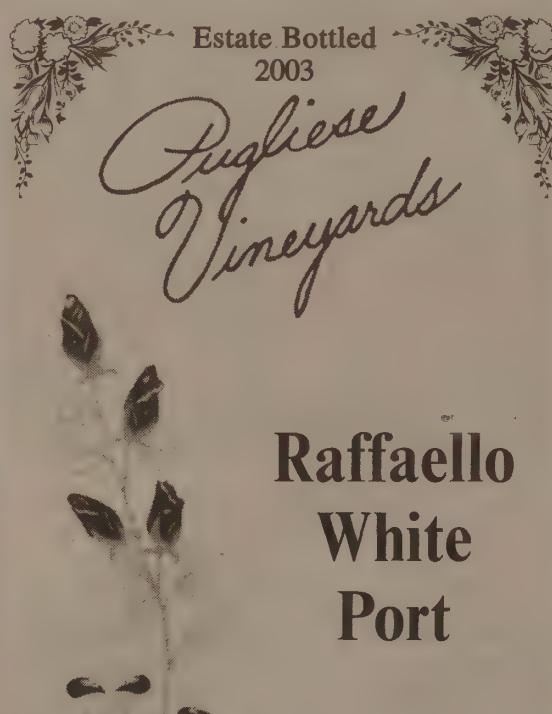

No matter the explanation behind Five-O, I respect and appreciate Martha Clara's dedication to red blends. They do a great job with them. But with the big "50" on the label, it is the ideal wine to serve at any fiftieth celebration.

So why did I call this a "glowing" review? Take a bottle of the Riesling, Gewurztraminer or Five-O into a dark room and you'll see. The labels actually glow in the dark. Coutts wouldn't give away the surprise, but he told me, "Wait until you see what the label on the (upcoming) "50" white blend does." I can't wait to find out.

Wedding / Wine Guide

By Susan Whitney Simm

Like its namesake, a brilliant red star in the summer sky, Antares Café continues to burn brightly in the small and competitive universe of East End dining. Opened by Matt and Kim Murphy half a decade ago, the charming restaurant's excellent food and service remain remarkably consistent. A mile or so off the beaten path of Route 25 in the Brewer Yacht Yard east of Greenport Village, this culinary jewel is a beacon for those seeking comfort, not to mention excellent confit. Here is a dining destination worth pulling the map out for.

Having dined here on countless occasions, I could probably recite, with appetite-whetting enthusiasm, the seasonal dishes as they are about to appear on the changing menu. In addition there are a few stalwarts that remain, to the relief of us devotees, almost year-round. The roasted mussels, with saffron, shallots and subtle Indian spices, is a sublime and beautiful first course in its oval copper pan with lots of sauce for dipping. Ask for a little dish of Matt's homemade chutney on the side and you'll have to work at saving room for your entrée. Also sumptuous is the ever-present Black Angus filet with a velvety red wine reduction sauce and crispy shallots. And for a light, refreshing first course, try the more recently added lump crab salad with silky avocado and local tomatoes, served elegantly in a martini glass garnished with a crispy wafer.

On a recent visit we asked Matt and Kim to serve us a tasting menu paired with both local and non-local wines. It began with a luscious, textural grilled vegetable terrine adrift on a lake of cherry tomato and roasted pepper coulis. We washed it down with Castello di Borghese's 2003 Riesling, a refreshing aperitif with good fruit and lively acidity. A pungent

Matt and Kim Murphy in the dining room of Antares Café arugula and sweet local beet salad arrived next, cleansing the palate with sherry vinegar and red onion jam. A 2004 Sauvignon Blanc, from Golden Kahn in South Africa, proved a perfect chaser.

Next came grilled swordfish with local corn salsa and roasted yams in a fermented black bean sauce. This dish is for those seeking big, bold flavors which, though not typical Murphy trademarks, work very well together. A wonderful Pierre Sparr 2003 Pinot Gris and Borghese's 2004 Reserve Founder's Field Sauvignon Blanc, made by talented new winemaker

Stan Schumacher, stood up easily to the spicy challenge.

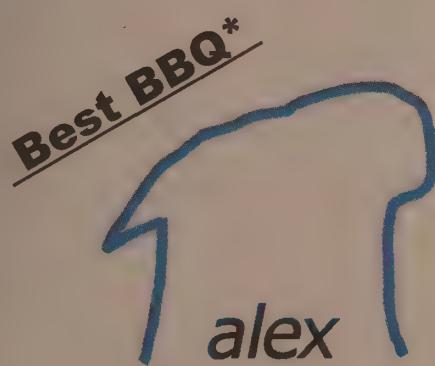

Lamb shanks, now elevated to haute cuisine, were always a favorite country-style dinner in my house. I consider myself an expert on few things, but lamb shanks are one of them. Matt's version, slow cooked and served over couscous with olives and apricots, brought back childhood memories with fork-tender meat and a delightful play of sweet and hearty. This dish is an excellent showcase for Matt's culinary skills, illustrating his talent for subtly infusing great flavor without pulling out a hammer. This spectacularly humble plate will dazzle fans of this cut of lamb.

Matt served a 2004 Septima Malbec from Argentina with the shanks, but Kim and I preferred the softer tannins of the non-vintage Bergen Road, a Merlot/Cab Sauvignon blend from Macari Vineyards in Mattituck. With our last course of duck confit, however, the big Malbec was a better fit. The duck, a specialty here, was served with a touch of garlic custard and fruit compote. This is a cool weather musttry. Simply cooked to a moist crispness, this dish again proves Matt's unspoken theory that less, when you start with first-class ingredients, is always more. It takes a chef who can restrain his ego in the kitchen to cook like this, an increasingly rare creature these days.

Dessert – apple crepes with espresso crème anglaise and mascarpone, escorted by glasses of 2003 Muscat Beaume de Venise – was perfect.

A country restaurant should be a place where grace and finesse welcome one with warmth and the promise of a delightful evening, a haven from the hustle and bustle of the modern world. Antares Café is the epitome of that place.

Merlot

this is what the region has been doing and it is time to go to another level." Roman Roth, general manager and winemaker at Wolff Estate, shares that view. "This is a great idea and this is the right time to reach out and start looking at ourselves in terms of quality and reputation."

David Page and Barbara Shinn, co-owners of Shinn Estate Vineyards, explain the choice of Merlot as Long Island's signature varietal. "We expect to product great Cabernet Franc wine from most vintages, (but) we expect to make great Merlot wines from all vintages." "Year in and year out," Roth adds, "Merlot is the wine that stands out. It is important to move Long Island forward together in regards to quality and reputation. Merlot will do that."

Olsen-Harbich agrees, but with a caveat. "Merlot is just one piece of the puzzle, albeit a very large and important one. It's the right place to start focusing." He admits, however, that Long Island Merlot isn't where it can be, or needs to be, and that is one of the reasons for forming the alliance. "We now have 30 years of experience. Are we there yet? No. Our vines are still too young."

LIMA members will meet regularly to evaluate vi-culture techniques and the subsequent effects on fruit quality, and to blind taste their wines to consider wine-making techniques. Bottled wines will undergo laboratory analysis, sensory evaluation and packaging review, and if they meet LIMA's minimum standards, the wine will be allowed to feature the Long Island Merlot Alliance logo on its label or affix the Long Island Merlot Alliance approved "Seal of Distinction" to the bottle.

LIMA members seek recognition for Long Island as the premier Merlot region in the New World, a title for which there isn't a lot of competition as most new regions move away from Merlot as a premier varietal. Washington State, however, has earned a reputation for making good versions. Is that a concern for LIMA?

Roth doesn't think so. "Every region has a jumpstart on Long Island. Our climate is extremely suitable for making great Merlot. I think we can make Merlots that are superior in ripe tannin structure and in longevity." Olsen-Harbich concurs. "We both [Washington and Long Island] started at about the same time and I think in the long run, because of our climate and soil, our Merlots will be more classic in style."

Among wine connoisseurs and moviegoers, Merlot has a slightly tarnished reputation nowadays. Poorly made California Merlot and the anti-Merlot sentiment in the movie Sideways contribute to this trend. "We, as a region, have never had much in common with California nor have we ever followed their lead," said Olsen-Harbich. "There is no question in my mind that California has destroyed the Merlot brand in that state. But we have to remember that not all Merlot is made the same. I don't think Petrus or any other growers in Pomerol or St. Emilion are going to pull out their Merlot vines because of what happened in California."

But is it wise to focus on Merlot in the wake of Sideways-inspired backlash? "If we were to follow that line of thinking, we would all be pulling out our Merlot vines and planting Pinot Noir," said Page. "It is simply a ridiculous notion to suggest that Hollywood should be dictating what we do in the vineyard." He also reminds us that Merlot is still the most popular wine in the world. Clearly, LIMA feels that chasing after "wine trends" is less important than focusing on what they can do best and most consistently.

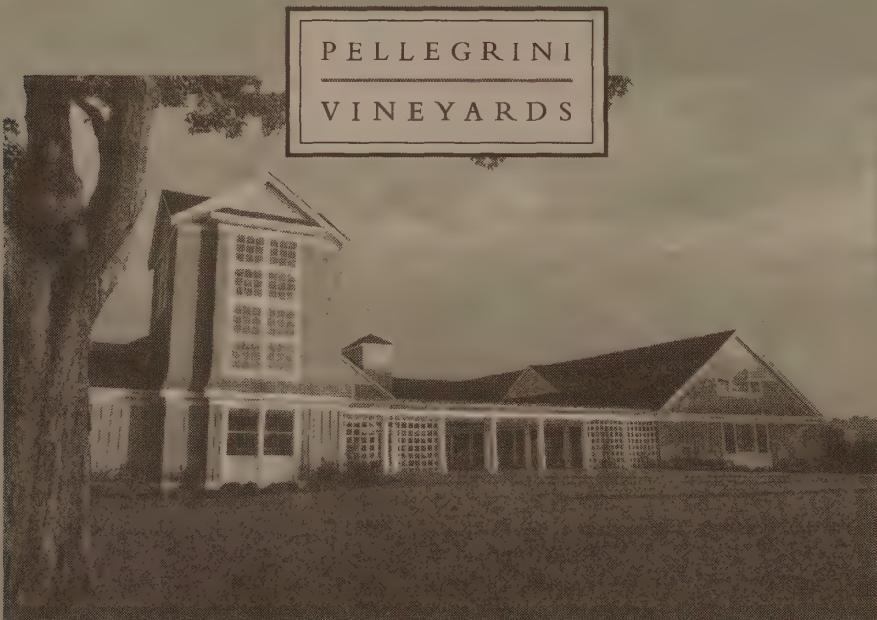

Some LIMA detractors appear concerned that focusing too closely on Merlot will detract from Long Island's other great wines. It's this diversity, they argue, that is Long Island's strong suit. Roth understands, but doesn't agree that promoting Merlot will hinder other varietals. "We will bring attention to Long Island and attention to quality. That in return will bring growth and diversity to the region." Members also point to Oregon as an example of how pushing one grape, Pinot Noir, opened the world's eyes to the region and its other wines, such as Pinot Gris.

So non-Member Merlot producers seem poised to benefit if LIMA raises the worldwide awareness for Long Island Merlot. In that way, LIMA seems like a win-win situation for the region. "The more discussion and debate about quality, the better the wines will become and the happier our consumers will be," said Olsen-Harbich. We will never compete in terms of quantity nor should we since we have the potential to do something much greater."

Next March, the Alliance will release 250 cases of its first jointly produced wine - Merliance. It will be sold at member wineries and at wine shops for about $35. There are also plans to hold special events, including a "Merlot and duck classic," next fall. For more information, visit www.longislandmerlot.com.

Charles John Vineyards: A Newcomer Worth Watching

Matt Campbell, co-owner of Charles John Vineyard along with his wife Jackie, can trace his love of wine back to when he and Jackie were living in Rochester, N.Y., in the early 1980s. "I knew nothing about wine. (But) we went to dinner and I ordered an 'expensive' glass of Sequoia Grove Cabernet Sauvignon for about $7 — to impress Jackie. I couldn't believe how good it tasted."

For a man who grew up on the Jersey Shore "listening to Bruce Springsteen" and knowing beer "as the only alcoholic beverage that had four letters," that glass of Cabernet was a revelation that Campbell jokingly calls "getting religion."

Campbell's job with Intel took he and Jackie to the Sierra Foothills outside of Sacramento, where they lived for seven years, exploring local wineries as well as those in Napa and Sonoma. He also enrolled in a viticulture program at the University of California — Davis, made wine at home and worked at a local winery during harvest.

It was Campbell's sister, however, who fell in love with the North Fork and introduced them to the region when she bought her house in Southold in 1982. "The contrast between the 4th of July Jersey Shore Budweiser-sponsored beach bikini volleyball tournaments and the resulting all-night partying versus the calmer, quieter, simpler 4th of July celebrations has brought me to the North Fork ever since."

In 1999, the Campbells' first son and vineyard namesake, Charles John, was born and the couple wanted to move back east to be closer to their families. Mr. Campbell moved to Intel's Boston office where he and Jackie "found ourselves 'commuting' to my sister's house every weekend because we enjoyed the North Fork so much. That didn't make much sense, so we sold our house in Boston and bought a house in Southold, and I've done a reverse commute once a week for a day or two ever since."

The same year, the Campbells bought 17 acres of land between Horton's Lane and Young's Avenue, north of Route 48 in Southold, and planted half of them with Merlot, Cabernet Sauvignon and Cabernet Franc vines. The remaining acres were planted a year later — and the first bottling, a 2003 Merlot ($18) was released earlier this year. The vineyard is managed by Mudd Vineyards.

With the help of winemaking consultant Gilles Martin, who is winemaker at Martha Clara Vineyards, the Campbells strive to make wines that are unlike the "heavy, grapey, over fruity, carbon copy mass-produced California reds people buy." They also show a dedication to the North Fork's terroir. "We clearly have terroir here," said Matt. "I don't know if it is the salty October storms or what, but you know distinctively when you have tasted a good North Fork red wine."

The 2003 Merlot release is an impressive first effort. Invitingly aromatic, the nose is sweet with black cherries and blackberries and spiced with oak, earth and white pepper. Elegant and flavorful, the wine is smooth and medium bodied, with slightly gripping tannins that provide the foundation for refined cherry, cinnamon and vanilla flavors. The soft finish lingers with sweet berries, and because the wine is still so young, it will likely improve and open up with short-term cellaring.

Campbell recommends the Merlot (which has 5 percent Petit Verdot blended in) with "pork, spare ribs, burgers — a porterhouse is best." It's hard to argue. This is a well-crafted, charming wine. The bottle, which features a label designed by Mattituck calligrapher, Linda Pascal, is currently available at select restaurants and wine shops on the East End. The Campbells also plan to open at tasting room at their vineyard site in the coming weeks. Call 765-9218 for more information.

It's the Thought that Counts

So much planning goes into a wedding that it feels like you have to get the perfect gift. And that can seem quite overwhelming. But what's important to remember is that it's the thought that counts. Well, to a certain extent. Here, some guidelines to make sure your present isn't memorable for the wrong reasons.

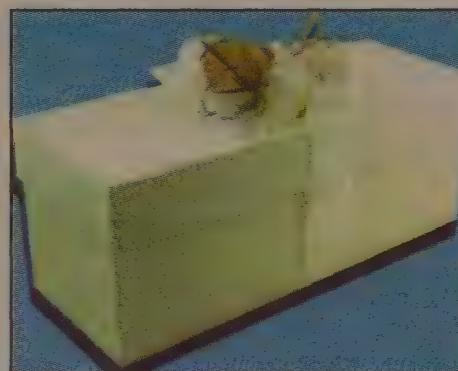

Predicting a couple's tastes can be hard, especially if you are not very close with the bride and groom. If you are not sure of what they would like, you don't have to guess. Use the gift registry to your advantage. Honestly, it wasn't created to be ignored. Giving the newlyweds something on the registry ensures that they will like the gift, guaranteeing that your money is well-spent. Plus, they are sure to remember who gave them the beautiful champagne flutes they had admired and hoped for. Don't feel like you are being impersonal by choosing something off the list; you can always write a sentimental note or add a little extra something. For example, if you decide to get them something for the kitchen, add a cookbook. Choose one that would suit their interests — perhaps they both love Mexican food or are spending their honeymoon in Italy. Tying their various interests in with gifts they've already asked for is the best way to give a great present.

Then of course, there's money. True, it seems like it would be slightly boring and maybe even tacky, but really, most couples would greatly appreciate coming home from their honeymoon to a little extra cash. Many have huge wedding expenses looming over them and many others are saving up for a house, a car or another big-ticket item. Truthfully, most fall into a few of these categories. If you want to make your gift a little more personal, try suggesting what they put the money toward by combining your check with a small item. Choose a photo album and encourage them to get that extra wedding picture. A miniature piece of furniture from a dollhouse or a toy car help make a cash contribution seem more like an actual present.

If you don't want to use the registry, you'll probably have to put a lot more thought into your gift to make sure it doesn't appear on the "worst gifts" list. But sometimes, veering from the norm is best. Try giving a gift for the future — something that will improve with age, such as a bottle of wine to be opened on the couple's tenth anniversary. Or, if you have a more impatient nature, try surprising them by upgrading their plane tickets for their honeymoon to first class. A gift certificate for a weekend away will allow the newlyweds to return to their honeymooning days, a pleasure they will be forever grateful for.

What not to give? If you're a former flame, do not give anything that even resembles something that could be reminiscent of your past relationship. Even if it might be something useful, it's best not to remind the other half of the happy couple of a former romance. While you want to give a nice gift, you don't want the bride getting jealous every time the groom uses the present from his high-school sweetheart. Keep it platonic.

Do not regift. No explanation needed. If, for some reason, you decide that regifting is an okay option (it's not), at least be sure to regift something only if you know who gave you the gift in the first place, and if you know that the original giver and the new recipient will never find out. But of course, they will find out when someone figures out what you've done, and you will feel quite foolish. So don't do it.

Also, self-help books should be avoided. We understand that you have good intentions, but really, who wants to be reminded of their flaws on what is supposed to be the happiest day of their lives? And giving a book on how to improve your relationship isn't likely to deliver the boost of confidence that the newlyweds are hoping for.

Finally, steer clear of gag gifts in general. Wedding gifts need not be completely boring, but it goes without saying that they should be a little classier than many other types of gifts. If you simply must give one, give it at the bachelor/bachelorette party.

Truth be told, gift-giving is a skill, and this is never more true than for weddings. The bottom line is to get them something that will make them smile. And never underestimate the power of a heartfelt inscription or note.

—Christine Edwards

Making Tux or Tails of Men's Fashion

As trends go, there are the obvious – avoid bolo ties (unless in Texas) and bandit collars (unless in 1993). Personally I have lost faith in the tuxedo. Unless the wedding is in the evening and is deemed black or white tie, I find the groom and his men wearing tuxedos to be a bit off-putting. Let's look at the reasons.

1. The tuxedos are usually rented and never fit quite right. The flattering lines of the torso are usually invisible because the jacket is too bulky and not tailored specifically for the person wearing it.

2. The waistcoat or vest. It is becoming increasingly common for men to wear backless vests under their jackets, which, for lack of a better description, looks cheap. It reminds me of the plastic Halloween costumes everyone used to buy at Woolworth's when I was little. The only problem is, we're not children anymore. If you're going to wear a vest – wear a full backed one. And please keep it tasteful. An iridescent red paisley design is just too much for any one person to wear, let alone an entire wedding party.

3. The third problem I have with tuxedos is that, after a few drinks, your third cousin from Topeka won't be able to tell the difference between your best man and the busboy. It is increasingly common to see the waitstaff wearing bowties and tuxedo shirts while serving, so it's important to distinguish yourself and your groomsmen from the guy serving the cocktail franks and the bartenders – that is unless you want Aunt Mary asking your usher to fix her a Rusty Nail.

4. If you do wear a tuxedo, I feel it is important to state that the wedding will be a black tie (or white tie) event. Stick to cummerbunds or a very simple black (or white), full-backed vest. Hand-tie your bowtie.

Never use a ready tied bowtie. Although you may not think it makes a difference, it does. Practice for weeks beforehand to ensure you will be able to tie it the day of the wedding. And always tie it yourself; it's a matter of principle, if nothing else.

If you've decided that a tuxedo isn't going to be the route you'd like to take, then you're going to have to sift through the several other options or make something up on your own. Matching suits and ties are nice. The hard part about this and most not-tuxedo options is that you and your wedding party are going to have to buy the suits. This may become a costly endeavor and the groom should think about paying for part, if not all, of the suit. Getting your entire wedding party together to shop for suits will probably be difficult, especially if they live on different sides of the country, so it is important to get the right measurements several months before the wedding and then have the men get the suits tailored themselves.

One take is the moderated black tie. It's a streamlined version of the tux without the ruffles and fanfare. A black suit, white French cuff shirt and solid black tie is a nice effect. It's slimming and attractive, plus black suits can be used again and again, so the outfit will not find its way to the back of the closet for eternity.

Looking for less formal? It's not a problem.

Although winter somehow dictates the wearing of black or darker clothes, there is still time in autumn to play around with color. Grey and blue suits are still viable options. It's just a matter of finding the right tie. Go for something classic. A stripe pattern usually works well. The idea is to have everything blend seamlessly. Nothing should be too bold. This isn't a board meeting, so leave the power ties at home.

It's also not a clambake, so unless you're going super casual with a blue blazer and a pair of green chinos, leave the lobster and whale ties on the rack until next summer.

I wouldn't suggest the green pants, but blue blazers are a nice, casual look. They work quite well here on the East End, where everything (despite their cost) is a little more casual. Like the suits, make sure everyone matches perfectly. There are thousands of different color blues, so get everyone on the same page. It may be too late for light colored trousers now, but they do work well with the jacket. Groomsmen and the groom should have matching ties.

Cuff links are great. They are a subtle way to separate the best man from the ushers and/or the groom from everyone else. Opt for either knotted links (a little color is always nice) or precious metal. If wearing silver or gold, be sure that the groom's cufflinks will

I Would Like to Propose a Toast

There are a lot of nerves jumping around the room at a wedding. Even if the bride and groom are written in the stars, there are some jitters that inherently accompany a day when two normal people are cast into the limelight, for better or worse.

One of the most nerve-racking parts of the wedding – besides the preparation, of course – is the speeches. The vows come and go quickly, the food and music are already planned, but the best man and the maid of honor are left to sweat through it all. The timing of the speeches varies; sometimes it's before the meal, sometimes before the first dance, sometimes after the cake has been cut, but regardless of what occurs prior to these speeches, there are two people who are less than entirely relaxed. Those people, two of the people most invested in the happiness of this couple, are freaking out. Whether a folded, sweaty piece of paper is pressed into their palms or the words are jumbled in the corners of their brains, all eyes are about to turn to them as they are to address this beloved pair with words of wisdom.

For the old drinking buddy or the little sister, this may be a high expectation. But here are some tips to make a speech that will knock them off their feet and flood tears into everyone's eyes.

Rule #1: Don't embarrass them with a story of the dumbest thing he/she ever did. It is only going to cause trouble. The brand-new spouse will look in the direction of your dearest friend/sibling and wonder how they could have done such a thing – or worse – how they could allow it to be said in front of the new in-laws. The story of that time you narrowly avoided being arrested for public nudity? – Fabulous for the card attached to the great new espresso machine you bought them. Not fabulous to share in front of Great Grandma Mildred.

Rule #2: Don't bore them with the inside jokes that only you and your best friend understand. Not only will the entire crowd be yawning, but the extremely significant other of your dear friend will feel left out on a day that is supposed to be theirs. Which leads me to my next point.

Rule #3: This day is theirs. If you are at the wedding, they obviously love you very much. If you have the honor – yes, the honor – of making a speech, then these are close friends of yours. But as hard as it is, you have to accept that this is not your day to shine with your sibling or cousin or friend. This is not your day at all. The reason you are giving this speech is to celebrate them, not you. So take a deep breath, and take a back seat. Because the reason you are in the spotlight for this shining moment is to cast the glow even more beautifully on them.

Rule #4: This is an extension of Rule #3, and I think it's one that often goes overlooked. But when it is applied, it will make both the bride and the groom incredibly happy, and it's tasteful and humble. Include both of them in your speech. Of course, you may have more to say about the bride if she's your sister and the guy she's marrying you've met a handful of times. Of course, you never thought your best buddy was going to end up with this girl when he ditched you for her at Senior Prom, but think about how they are together. Think about one of their most tender moments. Think about why she lights up when she sees him, even if he doesn't do it for you. Think about how he stayed up pacing all night when they got in a fight and he thought he might lose her. If you turn your speech into his, and then turn his speech into theirs, you will truly capture the essence of a marriage.

By embracing both the bride and groom in your speech, the first official address to this couple as husband and wife, you are humbly acknowledging the sanctity of what they have. As a result, your sister will smother you with kisses and your best buddy will wipe a tear from his eyes. Because it means so much to them that the person who means the most in their life was publicly embraced by you, the best man or the maid of honor.

Making the Cut

So, you have picked a date for the wedding, you have selected a location and caterer, and you have even picked out the food and wine. You know the per-head cost of the event, and you know your budget. Simple math dictates how many people you can invite. Whether you are having an intimate gathering or a huge bash of 250 or more, or anywhere in between, there surely will be people whom you would like to invite but simply cannot. How do you decide where to draw the line? Here are some suggestions.

One must start with immediate family. I realize that some people are not close with their families, and of course some families have had losses, but for most people the immediately family is on the must list. How "immediate family" is defined might vary from person to person; mine, for example, includes most uncles, aunts and first cousins. Unfortunately, for cutting down the invite list, some immediate families are enormous. Take my sister, for example, who was married a few years ago. Her immediately family, including step-relatives, includes two mothers, one father, and three brothers, plus two aunts, two uncles and five cousins associated with her father's/step-mother's side and yet more from her mother's side. Her husband's immediate family is a bit smaller, but even so, more than 25 invitations were taken by immediate family alone.

Mind you, there is an important exception to the immediate family rule, one that applies across all other categories as well: if you were not invited to someone's wedding, you need not invite that person. It doesn't matter how small that person's wedding was, or where it was, or why you weren't invited. The point is that this person drew the line to exclude you, and the fair presumption is that you should do the same.

Once immediate family is taken care of, the wedding party comes next. The wedding party may consist solely of a best man and maid of honor, or perhaps there are seven bridesmaids and seven groomsmen. Usually the members of the wedding party are close relatives and best friends, so these people likely would be invited no matter what. But it is important to focus on the wedding party before proceeding further, as the choice of whom to include in the wedding party sometimes can be prickly.

Once the immediate family and wedding party are accounted for, there are typically a minimum of four factions competing to invite friends and less close relatives: the bride, the groom, the bride's parents, and the groom's parents. In more modern families, such as mine, there were six factions: the bride, the groom, the bride's mother, the bride's father and step mother, the groom's mother, and the groom's father and step mother. (Some may count this as eight factions, and the traditional family as six factions, given that the married parents have two sets of potential invite lists, but part of being married is determining the compromises within the marriage. Thus, for faction purposes, married couples are to be counted as one.)

Assuming that the total number of people on each faction's invite wish list, after accounting for the immediate family and wedding party, exceeds the number of slots, there are really only two ways to proceed. The more egalitarian approach would be to divide the number of remaining slots by the number of factions. Horse-trading and other free-market principles are appropriate, of course.

Though it pains me to do so in the context of such a happy occurrence, reality dictates that I reveal the other approach, called Show Me the Money (previously called Follow the Money, during the period between the movies All the President's Men and Jerry Maguire). Under this approach, the person who pays for the wedding has the right to the invitation excess over the immediate family and wedding party. By tradition the bride's parents pay; if that applies to your family, so be it. Sometimes the bride and groom pay; in that case, they win the invite slots. And so on. Some accommodations must be made, of course, for the person paying for the rehearsal dinner, given that the guests to that dinner represent a sub-set of the wedding guests, but the calculus is just one of dollars and cents. Oh, do not forget: in that very rare case where a modern marriage actually involves a dowry, that payment must be taken into account.

This financial approach may seem callous at first, but think about it: if you throw any other kind of party, you decide on the guests – the wedding reception really is no different.

Once the invitation slots are allocated, any particular faction may still have trouble paring down its list. At that point, a ranking system must be applied. Each person on the invite wish list must be given a number from one to ten in two categories: desire to have that person come and feeling of obligation to invite that person. You must be honest here. Those who score 1 or 2 in either category must be eliminated, and those who score 9 or 10 in either category must be invited. All others, including those who scored 1 or 2 in one category and 9 or 10 in the other, must have their two scores averaged out. The highest scores win.

I would be remiss in not pointing out that the old maxim "Be careful what you wish for, you might just get it" is particularly poignant here for the gay and lesbian community. In those states and countries where gay men and women are able to marry, this Pandora's Box of invitation stress must be opened. In some ways it is even more complicated for same-sex partners, as very difficult questions arise, such as who pays for the wedding if one wishes to follow the tradition of having the bride's parents do so? That, however, is for another article.

– David Stoll

match his wedding ring – a lot of people forget that one. Another way to separate the groom from his groomsmen is a corsage – use the same flower, just a different color.

I quite like morning coats. I find them to be a classic look that only some people can pull off. They're not really your run-of-the-mill wedding outfit and if you're thinking about wearing them, look good and hard at your groomsmen and yourself to see if you're up for the challenge. Also, don't wear them for an evening wedding – they're called morning coats for a reason. Any self-respecting priest shouldn't even allow you into the church if you do otherwise.

Whatever you decide, you should feel comfortable in your outfit. It's your wedding and you'll have hundreds of things on your mind, so feeling self-conscious about what you're wearing shouldn't be one of them.

Abductions, Ju-jubes, and Broomsticks?

In a world where nomads battled saber-toothed tigers, loyalty to the tribe was more important than the individual. Thus many believe that group weddings were the first form of union among humans. Some doubt was cast upon this conviction in the past century, however, particularly in the early 70s when an archeologist found three sets of footprints preserved in clay: The first set belonged to a man, behind him walked woman and child.

From the little we know, it is clear the earliest weddings are far from the sentimental ritual we attend today. In fact they were an abduction, in which the bride-to-be was kidnapped by a rival tribe. Not quite our idea of courtship, but perhaps more interesting than the Country Club weddings I've attended.

After the nuptial kidnap, the new bride and groom went into hiding to avoid retaliation from battling tribes. This period of time has evolved into what is now known as the honeymoon. The term itself, however, originated in the middle ages when a couple was given a mead wine brewed from fermented honey and spices, to drink for a month (a moon).

The Scottish clans coined the term "best man," to honor the most esteemed wife-napper of the bunch. Our modern day bridal party has ancient roots that date back to Ancient Rome. In these ceremonies, bridesmaids and ushers dressed exactly like the bride and groom to protect the newlyweds by confusing evil spirits.

In Greece, rather than the usual bouquet toss, the names of all the bride's unmarried female friends and relatives were written on the sole of her shoe. After the wedding, the shoe was examined. Those whose names had worn off were said to be next in line.

Later, after tying wool and spilling oil on the doorstep, the bride was carried over the threshold by her parents and given to her groom. After a feast around the symbolic wedding bed, the bride and family performed a traditional mock show in which the girl is stolen by her parents and finally returned.

The Traditional Chinese ceremonies a , heavily veiled bride, walks gingerly in her father's shoes from her childhood home to the bridal sedan. This symbolic walk marks a passing into adulthood. Eastern cultures often incorporate cutting a bride's hair and shaving a groom as part of the rite of passage ceremony.

Many fertility rituals practiced in ancient cultures are integrated into ceremonies. In many African cultures, for example, bride and groom "leap the broomstick" to call forth conception. In other tribes long ago, a prospective bride was fed milk until she was too fat to walk in order to impress the man. Besides flaunting voluptuous fertility, a heavy figure was a sign of wealth. As far as I have read, this practice is obsolete today.

Chinese brides regularly are offered chestnuts and ju-jubes in hopes they will conceive a son. In contrast to the many rituals devoted to fertility, chiverie (of course the French thought of it) involved the interruption of the wedding couple at night by a crowd clanging pots and pans, ringing bells and horns, and firing shotguns. The bride and groom were expected to appear in their wedding clothes and provide treats for their tormentors.

Other pranks performed in this spirit of chiverie might have included nailing up the door, blocking the chimney, putting molasses, thistles or other irritants in their bed, even tying bells to its springs. These tricks, aimed at inhibiting the sexual act, relieved some of the strain of the solemnity of the

They're Playing Our Song

I'm not married. I don't even have a girlfriend. But I have been to a wedding. Actually, two. An observation I have made during these two joyous experiences is that, whether a band or DJ plays music, it is the selection of music that is of utmost importance. Certain songs, combined with a little alcohol, ignite something inside all of us and drive us instinctively towards the dance floor to groove. With more extensive research, I have discovered the ultimate playlist for your wedding. In no particular order, here are the essential songs that will change your wedding from a family borefest to a modern-day disco.

The foundation of every wedding playlist revolves around a song that is virtually impossible not move to. That song is "September" by Earth, Wind, and Fire and it immediately plasters smiles across the ballroom, due to the catchy, bumpy bass line that follows after the chorus sings, "Whoa-oh! Never was a cloudy day!" It is a guarantee that after this tune is recognized, even grandma will be shakin' her groove thing. Speaking of shaking groove things, "Shake Your Groove Thing" by Peaches and Herb is another bass driven masterpiece from the early disco era that will have you dancing holes in the floor.

What wedding would be complete without the sweet rhythmic deliciousness of Steve Perry's voice? My answer is, none. Journey provides weddings with some comic relief because you can sit back and laugh at the lonely single men mouthing the words to "Oh Sherry," "Faithfully," and the all time classic "Don't Stop Believing." Scott Ian from the band Anthrax once said Steve Perry sold his soul to the Devil in order to get those divine chord progressions. I agree with him but that still doesn't stop me from playing air guitar to those solo riffs in the middle of the dance floor at any wedding I can sneak into.

www.StarrD.com 516-883-3672

Now that we live in the 21st century, it is necessary to play at least one techno song at your wedding. My personal favorite is the DJ Sammy's remix of Bryan Adam's "Heaven." The bass drum beats gets your heart beat pumping. You can even implement a smoke machine and hand out glow sticks to give the wedding a true dance club aura. If you combine the original Bryan Adam's acoustic single with the more contemporary DJ Sammy club hit, in a smooth transition, slow dancing will go to grinding and the dance floor will become a breeding ground for chaotic locomotion.

Weddings also need special songs for special dances. These include the groom and bride dance, the bride and father dance, and the groom and mother dance. As awkward as these dances may be, with the whole crowd surrounding and the photographer snapping off pictures while blinding the dancers, these turn out to be the most sweet and genuine part of the music selection. That is why I will give no suggestions. These are personal picks that reflect each of these unique relationships.

Some obvious love songs include the R&B hit singles "All My Life (I Prayed For Someone Like You)" by K-Ci and JoJo and "I Swear" by All 4 One. Foreigner's epic ballad "I Wanna Know What Love Is" and Jefferson Starship's "Nothing's Gonna Stop Us Now" will get you through the mushy, romantic slow dances.

Now that your aurally perfect play list is set, it is time to talk about songs you should never hear at a wedding reception. "Bye, Bye, Bye" by N'Sync is a definite no-no for your wedding play list. You don't want to give your spouse the wrong impression that early. On the course of bad impressions, "Every Breath You Take (I'll Be Watching You)" by The Police will have you labeled with a restraining order before the honeymoon and "Girls, Girls, Girls" by Motley Crue will have the bride questioning your faithfulness and maturity. All and all, it's safest to stick to the kings of cheesy romance, Bryan Adams and Steve Perry. Their middle of the road approach to love will have you and your spouse not questioning anything until after it's too late.

The Five-Minute Minister

Years ago, when I was a student in New York City, I went to the wedding of a female friend from Scotland and her gay roommate. Their citizenship-gaining nuptials were performed in a Prohibition-era speakeasy on the Lower East Side before a motley crew of Downtown's finest freaky denizens. It was not the venue nor the union for your traditional, God fearing, fire and brimstone minister. The man officiating was instead a parody of exactly that. He spoke with the thunderous words of a southern preacher. He threw his hands in the air. He worked up a sweat. He was perfect for the occasion – pure entertainment. Vaudeville at its best. I saw his credentials. He was a legal minister, but he certainly hadn't studied for years. More likely, the guy had become ordained online. He made the best of it, and for this particular wedding, he was the best man for the job.

If you Google "online ordination" today, you'll find over 2.5 million results. Every day, people are sitting down at their computers and becoming legal ministers in 5 minutes or less. There are hundreds of churches and clergy spanning the religious and spiritual zeitgeist, ready and willing to recruit new members to their ranks. Some are free, others not. Some are very official and some could simply be people fishing for listing information to sell to solicitors. Shortly before I wrote the first sentence of this article, I became an ordained minister for two different churches without paying a dime. With a quick search, I first found "The Church of Spiritual Humanism." My new church promotes religion based on reason. As a member of the CSH clergy, it is my "charge to strive to base [my] actions on, and influence others to be motivated by, deliberation and reason and not the irrational, emotional, or subjective." I'm now authorized to officiate religious rites and ceremonies, including marriage, baby naming, funeral services and the like. Just like that—Poof.

While I'm proud of my membership in CSH, their web site was pretty low budget, and my reason and deliberation led me to seek out a stronger and broader calling. This choice was in no way irrational, emotional, or subjective. A second search led me to what I believe may be the mother of all quickie-minister churches. "The Universal Life Church," out of Modesto, California is a much bigger and more official organization. I now also hold credentials of ministry from ULC. Our church believes that everyone is already a member and just not aware of it yet. We will ordain anyone who asks, without question of faith, for life, without a fee. Our two tenets: the absolute right of freedom of religion and to do what is right. Anything else within the law is allowed. This is perfect for a man of faith, like myself, who has no qualms with any one denomination. We are, after all, worshipping the same God, no matter what we call Him or Her. We are encouraged to find our own path and our own god as long as it does not infringe upon the rights of others.

The coolest part about all of this is that I can now perform weddings for my friends. The possibilities are tremendous. As a writer I can create exciting sermons and meaningful blessings, and even cooler than that, by the rules of my new church, I can dream up a nifty god of my choosing. Maybe I'll worship Zeus. Maybe I'll get creative and design my own Super-God with tentacles for arms and really neat boots with rockets on the soles. I'll call him Oliveriah, Lord of Awesome Land. For an extra fee, I'll sit down with happy couples and allow them to design their own deity. We'll work together to channel Him. New York State's only law asks that to be eligible to perform a wedding, one must be officially recognized by their New York parish. As a minister, I can legally create my own parish. In the coming months, my basement will be undergoing changes beginning with the erection of a statue of Oliveriah. My Bible will explain the history of Awesome Land. My hymnal will include songs by Wesley Willis and Night Ranger. All of you are welcome. Just don't forget to call me "Reverend."

—Reverend Oliver W. Peterson

Two Weddings, but Only One Gurney's

I was invited to attend the wedding of Ingrid Lemme's (host of the "American Dream Show") older son Thorsten to his beautiful bride, Simone. It happened on September 15th at Gurney's Inn. This wedding was different from any other wedding that I have been to before, but I didn't expect anything else from the woman who keeps Gurney's in the press.

Ingrid has most of her family living in Germany, including her older son. Ingrid and Thorsten both knew that one wedding in Germany was not going to satisfy them, so she flew to Germany just before Labor Day weekend and celebrated a fairy tale wedding in a real Castle at the Burg Kniphausen in Wilhelmshaven with Thorsten and Simone's parents, friends and the German families. Then the newlywed couple packed the wedding dress and suit and had the whole gang fly to Montauk.

Most people are lucky when they get married once and have a terrific wedding. But I've never heard about anyone getting married twice within 12 days, with two ceremonies and celebrations, but they did it. The Gurney's wedding crew had simultaneously prepared a second wedding here for Thorsten's US family and friends. Simone was led down the aisle by her father, Edmund, for the second time in 12 days. Thorsten's younger brother, Nick, was the best man and Ingrid was the matron of honor. The wedding ceremony at the beach was almost ready to go when Montauk finally got some rain after a 4-week drought. The ceremony was moved and held in the Admiralty room at Gurney's overlooking the gorgeous ocean surf. Paul Sladkus, the President of Good News Broadcasting, performed the ceremony. Paul has recently been ordained as an Interfaith Minister and this was his first ceremony.

After the reception under the wedding tent, everyone went downstairs to the new banquet rooms, which looked awesome. I have never seen such a lovely wedding table and neither had the crew of America's Bride Magazine – they were invited to stay after a photo shoot earlier at the beach.

Later, the bride and groom danced a Waltz and the standing ovation was fit for any Pavarotti Concerto. The wedding cake, a creation by William Bertha, Chef at La Pasticceria, was a masterpiece of art and so was the decoration by Narcissa Torres. Chip Monte, the Executive Chef, outdid himself with the wedding menu. Besides chocolate-covered strawberries and petites fours, there were trays laden with of all kinds of German chocolate, placed on the long table. Nobody could resist, including me.

It was then time for the bride to throw the bouquet. The makeup artist from America's Bride Magazine caught the bridal bouquet created by Strawberry Fields. Geri Tomitz of Keshan Real Estate was among the wedding guests and so was Angelo Monte Sr. (VP of Gurney's Inn) with Cathee Thompson, Dan Rattiner (Dan's Papers), Inna De Silva (Social Life Magazine), the crew of America's Bride Magazine, Alan & Celeste Steil from the Montauk Bakery, Paul Monte (CEO Gurney's) and many others. The bride's parents, Edmund and Rosemary Buehrmann, from Germany were very gracious and seemed to enjoy themselves, as much as we all did, at this one of a kind, magical, "American Dream" wedding that only Gurney's knows how to do.

Abductions

occasion and were forerunners of the modern practice of attaching tin cans to the bumper of the bride and groom's car.

I would rather this tar and feather wake-up call than the strange circumstances that frequently surrounded Borgia weddings. The marriage between Jofré Borgia and 16-year-old Sancia of Aragon was recorded in the 16th century. The couple was followed into the marital bedchamber by the entire wedding entourage, undressed and placed on the marital bed. When the king and papal emissaries came in, the young they were uncovered down to the navel. As the poor brute tried to consummate the marriage, the king and consul members stayed in the room casually conversing. Talk about performance anxiety.

In ancient Greece, the wedding attendants stood behind a screen to verify the bride's virginity and witness her defloration. It was an entirely different story in Egypt however. Prior to the 20th century, some Egyptian men preferred not to deflower their brides personally and instead they hired a servant to undertake the chore.

One of my favorite ceremony rituals occurs in Mexican weddings. As shotguns are fired into the sky, Priest weaves a giant rosary, or lasso, around the betrothed. The first dance involves everyone linking hands and surrounding the newlyweds in a heart-shaped design.

With these strange antique traditions still in tact, the modern day wedding is loaded with symbolism and superstition most are unaware of. Although somewhat intrigued by these strange rituals (and I love the Jewish glass-breaking that recalls the fragility of love), some of my favorite weddings are those that break away from tradition.

My aunt got married on a boat floating down the Euphrates. Everyone was barefoot. Last year, a friend was married on a boat as gawking guests watched from a craggy rock edge at sunset.

A few weeks ago two close friends were wed under an arch of flowers on Mecox Beach as waves pummeled the shore behind them. Instead of the usual, "Here comes the Bride" tune, they proceeded down the aisle to the back beat of Afro-Latino percussion. Since then, I have retired my cynical view towards weddings. Perhaps wedding rings are not, in fact, the world's smallest handcuffs.

Okay, I admit I cried.

What was so beautiful about this wedding was how hand-touched it felt. The bridal party wore antique dresses hand-dyed by the bride herself. We stayed up to wee hours constructing spherical lanterns out of Christmas lights and wire.

The Salsa band played and the guests kicked off their shoes. When the speeches began, so did the lighting and thunder storm outside the tent.

The speeches were honest, gorgeous and unfettered, which means they were totally out of control, often inappropriate and one wobbly babbler even got the old stage hook. And yes, the bride was late and the flower girl cried and the bridal party was drunk, and yes, the caterer quit in the middle, and the wedding gown ripped... and, yes it was wonderful.

No wedding is guaranteed to avoid catastrophe, no matter how manicured. George IV got himself so drunk on the day of his wedding to Caroline of Brunswick that he had to be carried to the altar. That night, he fell asleep in the fireplace.

Princess Maria del Pozzo della Cisterno was unlikely ever to forget the day of her wedding to Amadeo, the Duke D'Aosta, son of the King of Italy, in Turin in 1867. Her wardrobe mistress hung herself; the palace gatekeeper cut his throat; the colonel leading the wedding procession collapsed from sunstroke; the stationmaster was crushed to death under the wheels of the honeymoon train.

Murphy's Law was declared at his own wedding. Okay, I made that up but I'm convinced all wedding ceremonies predict catastrophe. Keep that in mind. Expect disaster, embrace it if you can.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood In The Hamptons

The awful history of violence is almost entirely attributed to the United States by the rest of the world. Never mind that countries worldwide have seen the slaughter of huge portions of their populations by their own revolutions, pogroms and other holocausts of ethnic cleansing. They put those aside as aberrations but see us as embracing violence as a day-to-day way of American life, and feel that our violence is spreading as virulently as our fast food burgers splashed with gory-gaudy red ketchup (symbolically cross-referenced to the tangy blood of our bang-bang-you're-dead movies.)

This somewhat romantic propagandized notion of our killing appreciation is not lessened by our real-life, headline actions as a crusading, vengeful, war-loving nation, self-inflicting itself with serial killers, killing sprees, gangland rub-outs and the popularity of our blood-bathed movies.

And so it has taken a Canadian director, David Cronenberg, to intelligently and wittily show us a revealing picture of ourselves. His A History of Violence, typical of this genre of brutality, gives us a funhouse mirror image of mythic gun-toting America. It is set in the small town of Milbrook that would have fit Norman Rockwell like a pair of worn-out felt slippers. The film's soon-to-be-hero, Tom Stall, played with startling compulsive strength by Viggo Mortensen, quickly changes. Tom is a nice ordinary family man who operates a nice, ordinary diner (an entrance sign reads, "Friendly Service") but, when some really bad guys come in and threaten the town's soft-and-spongy-as-a-flapjack peace, Tom quickly flips into a man of action. After a Wild Bunch gun battle, the stuff oozing from the thugs is not Mrs. Butterworth's syrup. Tom is a local hero -- so much so that it even changes the sex with his wife, nice and lovely Edie, so nicely played by Maria Bello. News people swarm all over the town and Tom like flies on road kill. As word fast gets about, it gets killers on the road and soon a bleak black car pulls up to the diner. But let's go back to the beginning: a prologue of carnage that sets us up for the brutal massacre menu in the diner including an open face sandwich of gristle, pulp, squished eyes, nasal remains and other horrors of what's left of one of the hold-up man's heads. I apologize for the graphic description, but it might save you from seeing the terrible visual.

A History of Violence

A History of Violence opens up on a motel. It's early morning and two men are leaving. One checks out at the office while the younger guy moves his car. Oh, did they forget something? No.

They came for murder and so, the bloodletting begins -- an opulent display of near-wartime destructiveness. Dissolve to the pure innocence of the town that might have been Leave It To Beaver's neighborhood, as Mr. Cronenberg redecorates the setting as a back splash for unrelenting death splatter. Then, bit-by-bit, he twists the business from usual action movie's torn flesh into thoughtful expositions of values. Has Tom, the brave American hero of the day, done his duty as he saw it? How did he see it? As duty? As revenge? The film's violence goes far beyond reasoning. Is man's internal machinery constructed for cataclysmic eruption? And who the heck is Tom?

The ominous black car's contents include a scar-faced menace. Behind the dark glasses is Ed Harris as Fogarty. He's sure Tom is a killer named Joey. The confused identity has his wife and two children bumping blindly into him, as Joe or as Tom? His wife, Edie, says, "They don't like this guy they think you are." Just like the rest of the world's idea of us: The average American guy is, innately, a gun-happy, destructive creature living in a little house on the prairie that comes equipped with a timer that sporadically detonates, with hilarious good humor, into an explosive grandness. That is the scenario's repetitive style as scripted by Jude Olson, based on a graphic novel by John Wagner and Vince Locke. Despite the film's over-the-top largesse, it is as sparingly keen as the Grim Reaper's scythe.

A History of Violence gets deliberate laughs but, make no mistake, the director's aim is to make you realize it is not just a make-believe movie.

Guy Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

PAUL BRACH AT NEW YORK'S FLOMENHAFT GALLERY

We've all certainly heard the expression, "What goes around comes around." It is especially apt when applied to Paul Brach's current show at Chelsea's Flomenhaft Gallery.

First, there's the literal reason: one of the series is particularly inspired by prints Brach had done several years prior. They were found almost by accident in boxes when he and his wife, the artist Miriam Schapiro, moved permanently from SoHo to East Hampton.

While these original prints, which Brach developed into paintings, included text by the theologian Arthur Cohen, this time Brach went through the Old Testament, finding ten passages that were relevant.

Thus, ancient texts as an archetypal source serves as a philosophical reason that the expression works. (Poetry by Dylan Thomas has also functioned as literary inspiration for Brach in various ways.)

Even though these contextual derivations are salient, there are spiritual sources as well that give powerful meaning to Brach's work: namely, the recurrence of the circle (which always ends up where it started).

While the circle signifies myriad messages, for Brach it seems personal and not necessarily metaphysical (for example, the circle as indicating recurring of life and death).

For this critic, therefore, Brach's circles convey comfort, security and familiarity: forms connoting that everything is all right despite the chaos and isolation engulfing us.

Brach's paintings of circles divided by a vertical line give credence to this concept. The shapes provide a potent opposition to the isolating line which attempts to destroy their wholeness.

Brach's "Sinai" also challenges the idea of wholeness and coherence, but uses another approach. The circle seems to fade in and out as we look at it: its lack of constancy makes us falter a bit. It's as though the form is in the act of

"Red Shift," by Paul Brach

"becoming," but not nearly there yet. Even so, we still feel it will eventually evolve, turning whole in the process.

Another series also deals with circles, but single shapes do not fill the canvas. Instead, multiple circles form arresting designs. Called "Music of the Spheres," these works provide another meaning for "What goes around comes around," the configurations recalling dividing cells and their origin.

We can imagine that they might develop into single large circles as well, like those which predominate Brach's other two series, making everything all right in Brach's universe. Ultimately,

Mr. Brach's works will be on view at New York's Flomenhaft Gallery (547 West 27th Street) until October 22. Call 212 - 268 - 4942.

HONORING THE ARTIST: CONNIE FOLEY

This week's cover of the Sagaponack General Store is a familiar sight (and site) to tourists who spot it as they wander the East End's bucolic back roads. To local residents, of course, the store is a mecca for meeting neighbors, getting mail, and enjoying goodies.

For artist Connie Foley, who was sketching a field across the street last spring, the General Store offered both a respite from her work and a refreshing cold drink. She was immediately struck by what greeted her: "I saw this building that conveyed such a sense of history, but I also saw a Twenty-First century scooter parked out front. Two generations converging."

Naturally, Ms. Foley had to commit the image to canvas.

The artist's penchant for character and the past has led her to capture other scenes, like the Jamesport Country Kitchen and Kathleen's Bake Shop. (Considering these examples it would seem as though Ms. Foley's subjects center around food, but, of course, they don't. Actually a signature image in her work is the American flag.)

When we think about it, it makes sense that Ms. Foley has a longstanding relationship with history. Her great uncle was the chief architect of the Grand Central Railroad and her husband is a history buff. Her son has a history degree from Dartmouth, although he's working on Wall Street.

But Ms. Foley is known for her nature scenes as well, a favorite site being Accabonac Harbor, where she says she loves the "moody mist."

Ms. Foley's interest in mood takes another form when she recalls the creative process. "I don't know how things turn out the way they do," she says with a bit of awe. "When I paint, I get into a certain mood; I have no sense of time. It's like a mystical experience."

Ms. Foley goes on to explain this experience, "When I see a site I feel compelled to paint, that's a mystical feeling. I have an overwhelming desire to do it. It's a feeling other artists get, I'm sure, like a playwright."

Such insight makes us wonder what Ms. Foley thinks about the more practical side of art, namely marketing. "We live in a marketing society," she admits, "but I find it difficult to become involved. A gallery will promote your art for you. For me, painting is not competitive. I couldn't do my art if I were competing."

Ms. Foley doesn't mention, however, that she is, in fact, involved in a kind of competition. With herself. As she puts it, "If you take risks, your work improves. You see things that could be better. Exhibiting is helpful because you can compare your art with other people's. Working in a vacuum is difficult."

Risk-taking is important to Ms. Foley as she experiments with glazes and styles. Perhaps the biggest risk of all, however, is her goal "to make art that is shared, to recreate the feeling, the experience of nature. You just hope that what you experience is what the viewer also feels."

Poised for Poi

Is it an art form? A form of exercise?

It is both, says Susan Blacklocke, creator of Spiral Wave Poi, her take on Poi Arts. To watch Spiral Wave Poi is to watch an ancient art form still going in the 21st Century. Blacklocke, a native of Charleston, South Carolina and now a resident of the North Fork town of Greenport, has brought Spiral Wave Poi to the East End. Blacklocke has been teaching and practicing the tribal dance art form of Poi for the past three and a half years. Originating in the South Pacific and Southeast Asia, mostly with the Maori people there, many variations among different tribes have sprung up over the years: Flag Poi, Fire Poi, Light/Glow Poi, Poi Balls, all integrated with different types of music, yoga, martial arts, and dance. Other forms are practiced for coordination and skill training, self-defense, meditation, or for fun.

But, what is it, one might ask. It is a celebratory dance in which radiant spiral patterns are made in the air with two colorful flag-like strips of fabric mounted on long sticks held by the user. Blacklocke calls it a creative interactive activity, terminology that seems easy to grasp in our interactive age. Poi is both the objects and the movement. Blacklocke invented the form of Spiral Wave Poi with over half a dozen basic moves, from the Split Swing to the Butterfly to Chasing the Sun. Weather permitting, she can be spotted doing Spiral Wave Poi on the beach.

It's easy to see why Blacklocke has gravitated toward a practice like Poi. Her life to date has been full of movement. After a childhood in Charleston, she moved with her parents to England, lived in Spain, and backpacked through Europe. Over the years, Blacklocke lived on six different continents, a result of working on a cruise ship for nine years. On a luxury vessel catering to the very wealthy, Blacklocke was a visitor to incredible destinations. She calls it a wonderful experience, though after some time, she felt she needed to channel her verve into other creative pursuits. Blacklocke had seen Spiral Wave Poi in the streets of Spain and elsewhere around the globe. After much research, her journey into the world of Poi began. With her best friend Helene, whom she had traveled with on the ship and whom she has known since childhood, they created their own version of the traditional art form.

Blacklocke has taken Tae Kwon Do and Ballroom Dancing but doesn't have much formal dance training to speak of. Sometimes the Poi is choreographed; mostly it's spontaneous. "It's my workout to some degree," she jokes. As a practitioner of something with a more visceral nature, Poi has fallen in lockstep with Blacklocke's life. She follows a vegetarian diet and practices meditation, considering herself more a spiritual than a religious person.

Spiral Wave Poi has made many appearances in the area. Blacklocke teaches at the Greenport School, for Greenport Parks and Recreation, Southampton Parks and Recreation, North Fork Fun and Fitness, at Hampton Bays Library, and soon for the Girl Scouts. Greenport First Night, the dry celebration held nationwide every New Year's Eve, is another venue that has showcased Blacklocke's talent. She can be hired for parties, has taken Spiral Wave Poi to harvest festivals, town parades, Dan's Kite Fly, Shelter Island's Wades Beach Bash, and to events with the East End Arts Council. This fall, she'll perform at the upcoming Oyster Festival in Oyster Bay. She primarily teaches lessons for groups or individuals and holds a day job at the Indian Island Country Club.

Blacklocke also adds her "poi-performance" to the Hidden City Orchestra, a Long Island performance group composed mostly of musicians to which she belongs. Besides being nonstop creative, Blacklocke is also an accomplished photographer and displays work from her many travels. Her current exhibits are on view at the Martha Clara Vineyards and the Buzz Diner in Riverhead and can be seen on her website, www.spiralwavepoi.com.

Blacklocke makes the Poi herself, out of rip-stop nylon in rainbow colors. Made to order and sold on the website, they are sent out with an instruction sheet. She started to handcraft them when she found that a pair she ordered online were made from canvas she deemed too rough. Blacklocke will make them in any color that a person desires.

Although Blacklocke says it's nice to stop somewhere, she feels like she's still on her journey. In a few weeks, she'll make a move to the neighboring town of Jamesport. She says she feels very fortunate to have landed on the East End, and especially to have met so many people she enjoys. "I love it out here," she says. "I have so much less stress now." Very content with how this portion of her life is playing out, she says: "The last three years have given me the time and space I've needed to create."

Rejuvenations by Christina Poulos

Constant communication through phones and emails, and activities like working, driving, and home maintenance can sometimes leave us spinning. With these daily routines consistently keeping you occupied, you may think that it's impossible to maintain a truly balanced diet. But by learning healthy habits, you can obtain your maximum level of nutrition and improve your health in a flash. Best of all, you can perform these quick steps in less than the time it takes to brush your teeth.

Antioxidants are amazing. Eat spinach for lutein and zeaxanthin, which help protect against age-related vision disorders. Enjoy a spinach and egg white omelet, or spinach with balsamic dressing, chicken and tomatoes.

Harvard University studies found that people who regularly eat tomato products have a lower risk for heart disease and cancer. By snacking on salsa for the antioxidant lycopene, you'll also help satisfy your veggie status. Ounce for ounce, fresh herbs are higher in antioxidants than most vegetables. Wash and chop herbs like parsley, basil and dill and add them to salads and sauces.

Keep caffeinated by replacing coffee breaks with teatime. Get your fill of disease-fighting antioxidants with teas like green, black and white. According to a study in the Journal of Agriculture and Food Chemistry, dunking your tea bag for 60 seconds releases more of the tea's antioxidant compounds.

Sort your supplements. When it's more than just a multivitamin and you take an assortment every day, store your vitamins in visible containers within reach.

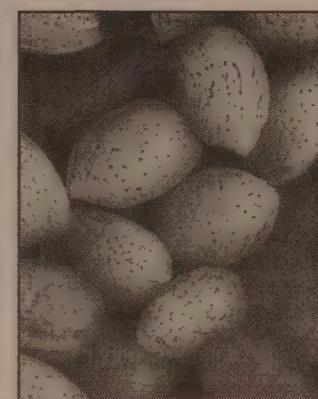

Display them on your kitchen counter or desk, or organize a week's worth of vitamins in an ice cube tray.

Vegetables should be the main focus of all our diets. If you are a "super taster" (very sensitive to bitter flavors), then you most likely do not care for raw veggies like broccoli and cauliflower. Instead, stir-fry, and then sprinkle veggies with grated ginger, chopped walnuts or almonds, or add sweet and sour sauce. Get your greens even when you're short on time, by quick-boiling green beans, asparagus or broccoli. This process retains almost as many nutrients as steaming, and it's faster. Add just enough water to cover them, and just boil for a minute to keep veggies al dente. If you don't have the means or the time to wash and chop, sip a V8 to fill your nutritional needs. Six ounces of V8 is equal to 1 serving of veggies.

Red peppers are usually a little more expensive than green peppers, but the extra change is worth the investment. Red peppers have more than double the vitamin C and nine times the amount of vitamin A than green peppers.

A glass of water with and between meals staves off dehydration, which often masks as hunger.

Eat food on smaller sized plates for instant portion control. When dining out we're often faced with extra large meals on over-sized plates. Ask your server to only bring half a portion, or have the other half wrapped as soon as your meal is brought to the table.

And watch that you never dine in the dark. Candlelight may be romantic, but brighter lights are more likely to counteract overeating.

When you get a snack attack, go nuts. With only 30 calories more per ounce than chips, nuts contain magnesium, folate, omega-3 fatty acids, fiber, and many other valuable nutrients. A serving size of nuts is about the size of a golf ball, so put your portion on a plate to avoid mindless munching. If you create a crunch with crackers, pick rye over saltines for six times the fiber. Whole fruit (60-80 calories per cup) is a better choice than fruit juice (about 140 calories per cup). You'll also get loads more fiber in fruit, which keeps you feeling fuller longer and may prevent colon cancer. Choose clementines, which are sweet, juicy, easy to peel and seedless. They also contain vitamin A, C, folate, and are just 35 calories.

Yogurt is the smart selection for calcium. Paired up with fruit for fiber, the combo makes a fabulous pre-workout or morning meal. Pick plain low fat yogurt and add your own fresh or frozen fruits like strawberries, blueberries, and raspberries. You'll cut back on sugar and about 100 calories. A quick sprinkle of flaxseed will contribute omega-3 fatty acid and help to lower your cholesterol.

Make simple steps today, turn them into daily habits, and you'll make dramatic improvements to the nutritional quality of your diet for life.

Putting the Pedal to the Path

We can't all be Lance Armstrong. We can buy spandex suits, aerodynamic helmets, and practice everyday on a stationary bike but most of us will never win the Tour de France seven times. But that doesn't mean we can't enjoy the exhilarating feel of a bike ride. It's hard to think of the eastern end of Long Island as a real destination for mountain biking—there are obviously no mountains. But with an abundance of trails within town, county, and state parks reserved for the public, there are plenty of opportunities to get out there and ride.

If you are a novice rider, it is best to stick to roads and flat, smooth surfaces so you can get a feel for braking and changing gears. Most high quality mountain bikes have 21 gears; three front sprockets, and seven rear sprockets. The reasoning behind the gears is so the rider can continue pedaling at the same unvarying pace, no matter how the slope or incline of the terrain you are riding changes. By practicing riding up hills, you can focus on standing up, leaning your body weight forward, and switching to lower gears so that you can summit the hill's peak without stopping.

Dune Road in Hampton Bays is an ideal spot for scenic, painless bike riding where flat, paved roadways yield diminishing traffic, especially as winter approaches. The long stretch of asphalt begins at Cupsogue County Park in Westhampton and rolls easterly to the Shinnecock Inlet in Hampton Bays. It is a striking ride that takes you past lavish, enormous houses as well as panoramic vistas of the Atlantic Ocean to the south and the bays and canals of Quogue to the north. The pinnacle of the arc-shaped Ponquogue Bridge provides a surmountable goal for this ride's finale. After climbing the peak, you can stop and absorb the breathtaking (literally 'breathtaking' after all the pedaling!) view atop the bridge overlooking the Shinnecock Bay. Then fly down the Ponquogue decline effortlessly, the rewarding adrenaline rush for your rigorous cycling workout.

Red Creek County Park in Hampton Bays is the next step for mountain biking. This trail cuts through the Long Island Pine Barrens region, and if trail signs are not carefully understood and followed, you could run the risk of biking either to Rocky Point or Montauk, either destination over 40 miles away. There exist plenty of trails that loop around the park and are ideal for fast and heart-racing mountain biking. Keep your eyes peeled for low branches and patches of sand that will alleviate your wheels of traction. These intermediate trails are a great transition from the road for bikers who want to pursue an efficient workout in a serene, natural environment.

Once you think paved surfaces and flat trails are boring and unchallenging, you are ready to move onto some hardcore, branches-in-your-face trails. Hither Hills State Park in Montauk provides a great series of trails within a 1700-acre state park. It is best to enter this park with a map you can obtain from the local bike shops. There is something for every type of biker here, from archaic dirt roads to steep technical hill climbs. There are ocean views from the bluffs and trails that push through beach sand. Some say they are the most beautiful trails on Long Island. The topography of Montauk differs from any other location on the East End. There are boulder-strewn beaches and steep cliffs propped up against crashing waves. It looks more like the Cliffs of Dover or some scene off the Pacific Coast Highway than the South Fork of eastern Long Island. Hither Hills State Park is a necessary stop for anyone interested in serious mountain biking.

Mountain biking has taken the physically active by storm, providing an exercise that benefits the cardio-vascular system as well as a low stress and impact strengthening for the lower body. It is always smart to approach this exercise with caution, so a helmet is just as necessary as the bike itself. Before hitting the trails, always make sure you have plenty of water and a snack just in case you get lost. Maybe even bring a compass if you're so inclined. There is no such thing as being too prepared. So hop on your trusty metallic steed and start pedaling to a new wave of natural fitness.

Taking Care and Being Aware

October is National Breast Cancer Awareness Month (NBCAM.org). It is estimated that over 215,000 women will be diagnosed with breast cancer this year. Statistics estimate that in 2004, 2,820 New York women lost their lives to this disease. If there is any good news, it is simply that early detection and treatment can greatly increase the chances of winning the battle.

Mammograms are still the best tool for early detection. It is recommended that women 40 years and older should get a mammogram every year or two. NBCAM states that the top four reasons women don't get screened are: "My doctor didn't tell me; I never thought about it; I don't have any problems so I don't need it; and I don't have enough time." Not surprisingly, most of the other reasons focus on fear (fear of diagnosis, fear of pain, fear of cost) as well as no routine medical care.

Knowledge is critical. My aunt died of breast cancer. She also died of fear. When she first found the lump on her breast, she was afraid to have it diagnosed, afraid that it would be positive. So, she decided to ignore it with the hope it would go away. It didn't; she did.

No one can say that my aunt would be alive today had she faced her fear and tackled the issue immediately. But, at the end of her life, she admonished herself, over and over, for not having faced the truth sooner.

To confront such fears with knowledge, there are plenty of sites available with information that you can access in the privacy of your own home, such as breastcancer.org, komen.org, and y-me.org, among others. To help alleviate the cost of a mammogram, in 1993 President Clinton proclaimed the third

Friday in October as National Mammography Day, and many radiologists have since provided discounted or free screenings. This year the date is October 21, so check local listings for participants.

Unfortunately, the risk of breast cancer increases as we get older. Eighty percent of breast cancer is detected in women over fifty, with occurrence highest among women over 60. Sadly, it is these women who are most likely not to get a mammogram even though Medicare will cover it.

What causes breast cancer? No one knows for certain, though it might be genetic. Estrogen has been linked to breast cancer, not as a cause, but as a probable stimulant of cancer cells. Research says those at risk include women who got their period before they were 12 years old; women who had their first child after they were 25; women who never gave birth, women who went through menopause after 55, and women who are using hormone replacement therapy. Heck, if you have breasts, you are at risk. Though higher risk is attributed to those with a family history.

So what can you do? Besides monthly self-examinations and regular screenings, a healthy lifestyle might help prevent breast cancer (as well as two other killers: heart disease and obesity).

You have read it all before, but here it is again: do not smoke, decrease dietary fats, increase fiber, eat fresh fruit and lots of vegetables, don't drink a lot of alcohol, and get exercise. Basically, be responsible for your health. Often women take very good care of the other people in their lives, but are not good at self-care.

This month, be proactive and ask the women in your life if they have had an annual mammogram. As women mature, they are less likely to get screened, so be sure to follow up with your mother, aunt and grandmother about whether or not they have had a mammogram. Offer to take them, if necessary. Because, time is the best factor in fighting this disease. So make time for yourself and get screened. Quite honestly, by getting a mammogram we have everything to gain and nothing to lose.

For more information about participants supporting National Mammography Day, call the American Cancer Society 1-800-227-2345; National Cancer Institute 1-800-4-CANCER; American College of Radiology 1-800-227-5463; Y-ME National Breast Cancer Organization 1-800-221-2141.

Extinguishing Fire Danger in the Home

Fall, the most gorgeous time of year, with the vibrant leaves and the deep rich flowers, is also a dry and crackly season. In a few weeks, we'll be lighting candles for jack 'o lanterns, and the holidays. It is a good time to be reminded of a few tips that will ensure safe celebrations.

First, of course, is the "don't leave a burning candle unattended" rule. Be very careful with candles that are part of elaborate centerpieces, candles that have dried flowers, leaves and berries embedded in them – who thought that was a good idea? – and remember to make sure that the one inside your pumpkin is blown out, before tossing the mushy gourd into the trash.

As a precaution, you should always have enabled smoke alarms throughout your home. It is recommended that there be one on each floor of a house, and even one outside each sleeping area. Smoke alarms dramatically increase the chance of surviving a home fire. "Your risk of dying in a home fire is literally cut in half by making sure your smoke alarm is installed and maintained properly," says safety expert John Drengenberg, manager of consumer affairs for UL, a not-for-profit safety organization that has been developing safety standards and testing products for over 100 years. Smoke alarms should be tested regularly and the batteries should be changed twice a year. An easy way to remember to do this is to change the batteries when you set the clock back in winter and again when you set it forward in the spring. If you don't want to do this, or fear you'll forget, it is possible to have smoke alarms hard-wired in your house. Call a reputable alarm company for information.

You should also always have portable fire extinguishers on hand. They can save your life, and at the very least, protect your possessions. Home extinguishers come in different varieties, but the best idea is to buy one that is approved for all types of home fires: wood, cloth, paper, flammable liquids such as gasoline, oil and grease, and electrical equipment including wires, fuses boxes and appliances. Home extinguishers are not designed, however, to fight large or spreading fires, and the number one priority in this case is to get everyone out to safety, and forget about your property. Call the fire department.

If you do need to use your extinguisher, it is important that you know how to use it correctly; you can injure yourself or others if you do it wrong. The time to learn how to use this life-saving device is before you need it – obviously, there will not be time to learn while the fire is blazing. Be sure you have read the instructions, and that the extinguisher is in a convenient location to remember, and is not too heavy or difficult to handle. Use only when the fire is contained to a small area and it is not growing rapidly. Sweep the stream from side to side, standing at least six feet away from the flames. Remember, disposable extinguishers can only be used once; they must then be replaced.

Installing a sprinkler system is a more extravagant option, but the falling water will certainly wake you up while it is dousing the flames.

Another idea is to create a home fire escape plan, making sure that all members of your household are prepared to react as soon as an alarm goes off. Designate an outdoor meeting place. As an added measure, you can buy an installable fire escape ladder to attach to a second floor window. Teach everyone how to use it, remembering that every second counts in a fire.

In addition to fire, there is another potential household danger whose incidence rises in the wintertime. It is carbon monoxide poisoning. Carbon monoxide levels in a home build up when fuel-burning appliances such as fireplaces, oil and gas furnaces, gas water heaters, gas ranges, or kerosene or gas space heaters are not properly used and cared for. Deaths from carbon monoxide poisoning have gained media attention in the last few years, inspiring several states to pass laws requiring detectors in newly built homes. More laws are pending that will require the detectors to be installed in all homes in the country.

Higher than normal levels of this deadly, invisible, odorless and tasteless gas can kill in minutes. One type of carbon monoxide detector must be maintained like a smoke detector, but there is another more convenient type that plugs into an outlet and therefore, has no batteries to change. Both kinds should be placed at least 10 feet away from any appliances, but in proximity to potential sources of the gas, and more can be placed near sleeping areas. They are readily available in hardware stores and home centers.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Landscape Latitudes

So many of us can't wait to exit the City to get to the Hamptons on weekends! We need a change, want to commune with nature, and breathe some fresher air. While these ideas work for me personally, I can't wait to slip into my own space, shut out the world, and have some private time in the garden I created. What a joy to sit among the flowers! Within this realm, things are as I desire; I am surrounded by plants I have selected, nurtured, tended, and grown.

There is a sense of power in a garden. I have complete control over the destiny of plants. (Others feel this about people, companies, even nations!) How I relish, sometimes, my ability to yank out an unwanted tree because it improves my view of sunlight, eradicate invading weeds to enable those I prefer, and prevent the intrusion of some types of insects and animals. I suppose this is my version of the "walled-in" community.

In the world at large, others relish broader and more impacting controls than my small plot of land. While I am content to oversee some few garden plants, others, with broader perspectives and larger egos, insist on managing the world's religious views, women's rights to their bodies, and even the perceptions of reality. Sometimes I wonder about those folks—especially when the focus seems skewed.

Because of the effort the garden takes, it often means something has got to give.

Sometimes it is me, sometimes the garden. So I have learned to rethink my approach, change foci, and consider plants I can keep up with. Not doing so means I won't be gardening for long or will eventually hate the drudgery! Similarly, this is the present world situation—something has to give!

I love exotic plants. Planting tender specimens in spring, racing out in autumn to rescue them before the last frost, carefully cleaning and prepping them for the greenhouse, keeping them plump and healthy all winter, and repeating the cycle in the following spring appeals to me, but causes lots of work. I can just imagine the stress of controlling a nation's thoughts. Is it worth the toil?

What is normal in the garden ought to be what is natural in the garden. Native plants tend themselves quite well on their own. Every garden has plants that are taken for granted. Plants that fill their allotted space without fuss, are undemanding, and can thrive with so little that we forget they are there. These are the workhorses of the garden and the kinds of plants we need to really love if we want to keep on enjoying the act of gardening. The same, it seems, is true of society, its neighborhoods, communities, and nations.

Many of us react to native plants with vague uneasiness: "aren't those the things that grow by the roadside and in ditches?" Yes, and they grow in our lawns too, except that we mow them down so the baby plants never mature to the point where we recognize them. But, perhaps, if tended, they burst into lovely masses that are every bit as pleasing and elegant as the fussy hybrids we pamper. I know that if we nurture and tend discarded children and "natural but abnormal" individuals who are challenged, alternative, or strange— pleasing and shining results occur.

Learning to love all plants is like learning to love all people. It requires not just an attitude adjustment by those of us who have arrived, who pride themselves on the exotics. It requires a readjustment that increases our horizons, and focuses on what is truly important. Our eyes as easily learn to prefer a garden full of ornamental grasses and drifts of Echinacea and other native plants as to one packed with plants that demand pampering.

Time does not stand still in the garden. It changes. We change. Sometimes it can be hard to keep up with all those changes – unless we learn to garden smart. That means not sweating the small stuff, and maximizing the result in simpler ways. I think Shakespeare summed it up beautifully when he had Hamlet say – after so much strife and disappointment – "let be." Perhaps it is time for greater tolerance in the garden. It is certainly a time for greater broadmindedness in society!

Many Colors, One Season

When your kids ask the tough questions like, "Who would elect President Bush?", "Where do babies come from?", and "Why do the leaves change colors in the fall?" you will finally have a simple definitive answer to at least one of them.

The colors of autumn are spectacular, especially in the North Eastern United States. Because of all the water on the East End, the reflection of these beautiful leaves brings landscape painters and photographers out in droves. Everyone (save the color blind) notices the change in colors, and although that first brown leaf on the ground means summer is done, it also means the splendor of autumn is upon us.

But why do the leaves change colors? The short and simple answer - they die. I know, any five-year-old is going to want more than that as the explanation so here it is, in its easily understandable and more scientific ways.

Despite leaves looking like they are completely flat, there is a complex system of "veins" which carry chemicals, glucose, food, water, and waste in and out of the leaf. This is called the "abscission" layer. As winter comes the cells in this layer begin to swell and eventually cut off the flow of water to the leaves. The less water available, the less the tree is able to replenish its supply of chlorophyll. Chlorophyll is the chemical which helps turn sunlight into food (photosynthesis). It is green in color, so in the summer when there is a lot of water, there is a lot of chlorophyll in the leaves - making them green. There are a few other chemicals inside tree leaves as well. Although the exact roles of xanthophyll, anthocyanin and carotene are unknown they are believed to help in the processes of photosynthesis. For our purposes, these chemicals are important because they help control the color of leaves when they begin to change color.

When the cells swell, water becomes scarce and the replenishment of chlorophyll cells and the removal of waste materials becomes impossible. The leaf begins to lose the green color of the chlorophyll and other chemicals or elements inside the leaf begin to show. Carotene is something we all know to be in carrots and sweet potatoes. It's what gives them their orange color. The same is true with leaves. If a large amount of carotene is inside the leaf when the water supply disappears, the leaf becomes orange. If the xanthophyll levels in the leaf are higher than that of any other chemical then the leaf will turn yellow. Anthocyanin, a pigment found in beets, violets, and purple grapes will turn leaves purple or even bright red. As for the brown leaves, and there are many, it comes from tannin. Tannin, a word you may recognize from wines, is a waste product that is usually pumped out of the leaf.

In order to get the most brilliant colors a few things must occur. The autumn days must be bright and sunny and the evenings cool. The bright sunny days will help promote the creation of glucose, which fosters the production of anthocyanin. This is important in the later days of autumn because the swelling of the cells has already begun and the majority of the anthocyanin produced will be trapped inside the leaf. Warm days will more than likely prolong the coming of fall and therefore allow the act of photosynthesis to continue, making for a less colorful season.

Although we can't control the weather, we do have some say over our own yards and if you are looking for particular fall colors then certain trees will more than likely give them to you. Dogwoods are known for producing purplish red leaves, while Japanese Maples are known for having brilliant purple leaves in the autumn. Sugar Maples on the other hand are less dramatic, but their orange-red color is just as beautiful. Black tupelo and sourwood leaves turn a crimson hue. If you are a fan of lighter colors, Black Maples give off a glowing yellow color while Hickories turn bronze. Beeches produce a beautiful light tan color leaf, while Aspens and birch trees turn a golden yellow. Oaks, which are abundant on the East End, are a crapshoot as their colors range from yellow to red to brown.

Hopefully I've explained the process of leaves changing in a simple enough way so that when your children begin to ask the all-but-unanswerable questions, at least you'll be able to tell them something.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

There is no doubt that the real estate market is beginning to change. How much and how quickly it will impact the East End is yet to be seen. Buyers here continue to put out big numbers and although the volume of sales are low, the numbers are high. Realtors here have seen an increase of 31% in the value of properties in just the past three years. Will we continue to see a rise or are we at the brink of a slow decline? Many brokers think the latter may be so.

In Westhampton Robert Scribner of Real Hamptons Realty says he has begun to see slow down of late and reports that a buyer recently backed out last minute on what would have been the largest sale ever, west of the canal. However he says he is still working with a handful of clients in the $5-15 million range. It seems that when buyers buy, they buy big. A seasoned Hamptons realtor may need only to do a few solid deals each year.

Just recently Kelsey Grammer ("Frasier") and his wife Camille, who have summered here for years, finally settled on a property in Bridgehampton. The couple have been looking for a home for quite some time. They settled on a new shingle style in Bridgehampton valued at $8.45 million. The 7000 sq ft home has 6 bedrooms, 8 baths, media room, sun room, and butlers' pantry. The home has two staircases as well as an elevator. There are five Private estate drive in Southold, courtesy of Prudential Douglas Elliman. fireplaces. The estate is set on 1.7 acres that include a tree lined drive leading to the house, pool, spa and tennis court. The Grammers have not yet closed on the property.

Richard Gere has also been seen scouting new Hamptons properties. Rumor has it that the actor is looking at a Water Mill estate that is valued at close to $20 million. Gere, who already owns two Hamptons properties, has now become interested in a 100-year-old gem that sits on 4 acres overlooking Mecox Bay. Believe it or not, the 10,000 sq ft mansion that is listed at $19.75 million needs some work. At this price, the term handyman's special takes on a whole new meaning.

In the Hamptons, there will always be high-end buyers, whatever the high end is at that time. It is all relative. The old real estate adage, location, location, location, will forever ring true, and the Hamptons has for years and continues to be the location where everyone wants to be.

On the North Fork, Broker Steve Mandresh of Century 21 Agawam Albertson in Jamesport says that there is a currently a build up of inventory due to overpricing, sometimes by hundreds of thousands of dollars. This can keep a property on the market for far too long and make it stale. The property can end up selling for less than it may have brought if it was priced correctly in the first place.

Priced right on the North Fork is a spacious waterfront on the Peconic Bay in Southold with its own private beach and private drive. The home is listed exclusively with Prudential Douglas Elliman in Southold at $3,350,000.

EAST END BALKANS

Dear Dan,

I'm no expert on the pros and cons of Village Incorporation in the Town of Southampton, but apparently David Stoll isn't either. While I agree with his point of view about the ill-fated Dunehampton incorporation effort, his references to the incorporation of Sagaponack are poorly thought out, to say the least.

For three of the past fifteen years my wife and I lived in the "Hamlets" of Noyac and Bridgehampton; for the other twelve years we lived in the Incorporated Village of North Haven, which is separate and distinct from the adjacent Incorporated Village of Sag Harbor. Even though these two Villages are very different in character, they share a governmental philosophy and I believe an overwhelming majority of residents in each place are very satisfied with their status. In my opinion, they are better off precisely because there is

JOHN DALY REDUX?

Most of us know how frustrating the sport of golf can be. We just never take it this far. A disgruntled golfer who must have shot over par apparently took out his aggression on the greens on Saturday, October 1. It was reported that a driver gave the 12th fairway at the Shinnecock Hills Golf Club a lawn job. When I say driver, I'm not talking about the Big Bertha you'll find in your golf bag. I'm talking about the driver of a pickup truck whose peeling out escapades severely damaged around $20,000 worth of greens. Shinnecock Hills, one of the oldest and most prestigious golf courses in the country, will most definitely go forth with an investigation.

BEACH BANDIT

A series of thefts went down at Sagg Main Beach in Sagaponack on September 25. A gold watch with matching band worth $7000 was stolen from a man's unlocked Cadillac Escalade. That same day at the beach a car window was smashed, and a woman reported her yellow purse and several expensive items taken from within the car. These items included several forms of identification, a $2000 Sony video camera, a $900 Canon digital camera, a $300 Sony Erikson cell more local control of land use, zoning and other quality of life matters.

My guess is that the Incorporated Village of Sagaponack will have the same benefits for its residents. In many ways, it will be similar to North Haven because both places are about the same size and neither has much of a commercial district. He gives far too little credit to the people of Sagaponack for having many more reasons for incorporating than beach parking.

It should also be noted that Sag Harbor Village has the same population as the entire Town of Shelter Island, so size is a relative matter. And Southampton Town is more than twice the size of any of the other four East End Towns. For that reason, I've even heard some people predict there may even be two Southampton Towns (east and west) in the future, perhaps with a Town Line at the Shinnecock Canal.

David Stoll seems to feel this trend towards smaller, more local (and accountable) government is "sad." Personally, I think he's got it all wrong. As the noted economist E.F. Schumacher said many years ago, "Small Is Beautiful". It's also more manageable.

I'm doing a lot of work at the regional level with our five East End Towns and now fifteen Villages regarding public transportation development. We have not encountered any problems in working together – this is not the Balkans, as he incorrectly implies!

It's those little tiny letters that keep getting typed wrong. -DR

BEATNUT
Dear Dan,

In your otherwise excellent article Neighbor: Paul McCartney, Songwriter – September 23rd 2005 – by Jan Silver, there is one serious omission and one reinforcement of the incorrect myth about how the Beatles got their name.

phone, and a $400 pair of eyeglasses. What's peculiar is that all of these valuables were located in a diaper bag with various other baby products. Was the bandit aware of this or did he need to bring some Gerber baby food home to his kid? It is unknown whether there were dirty diapers in the bag at the time of the robbery.

PETTY THIEF

A man in Montauk reported that someone broke into his house and stole $7. There were no signs of forced entry. I think this man should look through all of his pockets, or at least under the bed. If I called the police every time I lost $7, they would've stopped picking up the phone by now. It goes to show your local police department will never pass up a crime, no matter how petty.

CRIME WAVE

Two surfboards were reported stolen this week. One of the boards, valued at $350, was taken from off the grass at Ditch Plains in Montauk after being left unattended for five minutes. The other board was swiped off the roof of a man's car on Hilltop Road in Southampton. It is unknown whether these two crimes are related, but it is suspected that the thief caught a gnarly tube from

Before Pete Best or Ringo joined the Beatles, Stuart Sutcliffe was their first bass player. It is well known and documented that Stuart Sutcliffe and John Lennon met at art school in Liverpool and were best friends. It was John who persuaded Stuart to use the proceeds from a major art prize to make the purchase of a bass guitar and to join "John's Group" – at that time "John's Group" was called "The Quarrymen."

I suspect the error about the origins of the Beatles name was due to faulty research and not as a function of 63-year old Paul's memory. It is clearly stated in his own publication "The Beatles Anthology" (Genesis Publications) and confirmed by George Harrison that Stuart and John thought up the name for the group, The Beatles, and furthermore it came from the girl gang in the Marlon Brando movie, "The Wild Ones."

I understand the default to old mythology, as I occasionally re-read some of my own publications and find mistakes repeated.

I look forward to reading Paul's children's book due out in October (you forgot to mention the publisher) and hope that his current tour is a huge success.

I too am a resident of East Hampton and wouldn't miss picking up my weekly copy of Dan's Papers and reading it from cover to cover.

LET'S GIVE THEM SOMETHING TO TALK ABOUT

Dear Dan, Dear Sally Flynn,

As I sat down to read Dan's Papers and turned to The Sheltered Islander I was in tears of joy. Not only did you hit it on the head; you also hit it in all the right places.

I take my hat off to you Ms. Flynn, and thank you for putting the truth on the table so well.

Thank you for your humor, this one I will frame.

Ditch, and rode it all the way west through barreling sections until he wiped out in Southampton. The crook needed another ride so he ripped off his next board in Southampton and he's probably halfway down the Atlantic coast by now, searching for his endless summer. That's just my theory.

LOSING TICKET

If you can learn anything from this police blotter, it is that you can never trust a stranger. A woman got scammed in Hampton Bays on September 23 when a man asking directions to a lawyer's office approached her. While she was talking to this man, a couple approached them and asked why the man was looking for a lawyer. He explained that he had just won a $230,000 lottery ticket but couldn't cash it in because he was an illegal immigrant. The victim of the scam agreed with the couple to put up $1300 each in order to buy the ticket and then split the money later. She gave the couple her money and they vanished, never to be seen again. The victim took a gamble on a couple of strangers and lost dramatically. A Southampton Town Police Sergeant was quoted saying "that's the oldest scam out there."

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR SALE 2 Jewish Cemetery plots in East Hampton. Belgian Block coping, nice location. Private owner $18,000 (631) 323-1274

STOP FOR TURTLES From late spring through the fall, our indigenous turtles roam their now fragmented environment. As they wander out onto the roadways, they are often struck by speeding and unexpected motorists. These precious turtles are slow moving and can be easily avoided. When frightened, they withdraw into their shells and resemble an elliptical stone in the road. Please drive with care and help a turtle cross the road.

Lower Mortgage Payments by 45%

With Sophisticated Jumbo Loan Program

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages.

Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find. The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

If you are self-employed, professional or high-income individual, there are many other savvy "secrets" and various loan options that you probably aren't aware that exist.

Simply call 1-877-794-5363 to request this informative free report.

Generations

*"I want my arms
them all."*

James V. Zizzi describes it as a return to the nesting instinct. It's only natural to rejoice a bit when the last of the kids moves out. Care to dance? I'll get the champagne. But eventually there are grandkids you want to spoil. Or perhaps a rather large and still growing extended family. Many of the clients of James V. Zizzi express a desire for a place for all to gather to celebrate, to laugh, to remember, and come back to ... for generations.

A place with a huge hearth where old memories can be relived, new ones created. A place where meals can be prepared and secret family recipes shared. A place with expansive windows overlooking the children safe at play.

Some builders see empty nesters as a market opportunity. James V. Zizzi sees them as part of his growing family.
